On Flying Higher
(Exchange)
Pan American Airways soon will be trying out its first plane designed for sub-stratosphere passenger flying. This machine, built by Boeing and in less than two miles a road approaching Oxnard, seventy-seven signs were noted.

Massachusetts was the pioneer in keeping billboards out of restful districts, back of highways and away from intersections, and prohibiting them in locations of unusual scenic beauty or where they are "harmful to public welfare"—a broad provision which enables the authorities to keep them under control.

Two great advantages exist. It is understood, about sub-stratosphere flying. One is that the resistance of the air is less because it is much thinner. Another is that these higher air masses are quite untroubled by the disturbances, cross-currents, swirling storms, and ordinary winds that constitute the weather of that earth's surface. If man-made wings are able to make so much more rapid headway by rising to great heights, does it not suggest that men themselves will make more rapid progress by rising higher in their thinking about the resistance and disturbances of earth?

Radio's New Frontiers

(Exchange)
Twenty years after its inauguration in the United States, radio stands today at the threshold of its most momentous year since 1920. After desultory technical changes during the last decade, it suddenly jumps forward on three steps—frequency modulation, or "staticless" broadcasting, television, and quality home-recording. Staticless radio, or "P. M.", giving amazingly quiet reception, wider tonal bands and doubling volume contrasts, will bring a new era of what constitutes quality reception of music at home. Television, with many of its early wrinkles ironed out, will be giving definitely interesting programs on thousands of receivers in the New York area this fall, with extension of this service to other major cities before the winter season ends. More detail and bigger pictures have already been technically achieved and are about ready for the market.

Finally comes home recording, not to be confused with the noisy, nasal-sounding and premature, metal disc system of five years ago. Today, acetate, that modern product which does so many useful things, has produced records which are beautiful, while the technical art has given light pickups which permit playing these acetate records hundreds of times without wear.

This home recording is not a novelty merely for the recording of Junie's voice or what a self-conscious guest tried to say at last week's party. Rather, with the high quality radio sets now available, the listener can take down any program he desires and repeat it at his heart's content as many times as he wishes. With the better instruments the quality of tone from the records sounds as clear as the direct broadcast itself.

In Step With Inventors

(Exchange)
A "Parade of Inventions"—as the gathering gathered in Washington to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the first national patent law, was justly named—comprehends many and diverse things, from ancient Chinese printing blocks to the recent "beardscope" which electrically determines the direction in which a beard grows.
But there must be many inventions left out of such a parade and contributed to human living by unknown inventors. Who, for example, invented the clothes-line—that harmless wooden bined—that straddles the clothes-line? Or who the safety pin—that invaluable first aid when one loses a button? Or, for that matter, who the button?

Civilization was made possible by inventors who got no patents. It is agreed that there was no civilization in the Paleolithic era; but the dissatisfied individualist who fastened a stone to a stick and made a hammer projected the Empire State Building. Macaulay, pointing to Bacon's departure from earlier philosophers in his respect for utility, quotes Seneca:

"If any one time there have been inventions . . . transparent windows, tubes for diffusing warmth through all parts of a building, shorthand, which has been carried to such a perfection that a writer can keep pace with the most rapid speaker. But the inventing of such things is drudgery for the lowest slaves."

Something more than 2,000,000 patents have been granted in a century and a half, and about 40,000 nowadays annually, the much larger proportion being improvements on earlier inventions. Most of them (if they are improvements in practice) are absorbed into use without attracting attention to the inventor.

Automatic Redcaps

FIVE BUSHELS PAYS FOR NEEDED FERTILIZER

What does it take to make a fertilizer application pay, even on a crop such as oats which normally are priced lower than other grains?
One answer to this question comes from R. L. Cook, solid specialist at Michigan State College. A five bushel an acre increase pays for 200 pounds of 70-20-0 when oats are selling for 40 to 45 cents a bushel.

That much of an increase is difficult to detect. Experimentation by farmers is excellent. Cook agrees, but he suggests that the eye is a poor judge and that when a strip or portion of a field is given an application, actual yield checks should be made to determine any advantage.

Another factor important to a soils expert is that the soil on one side of a field may be enough different from that on the other side to counterbalance any evident increase in yield caused by the fertilizer.

Tests on the John M. Reigh farm in Tuscola county were run for five years. Legumes and clovers have been plentiful, so 20 per cent superphosphate was used. An application of 200 pounds an acre gave a return of $1.79 for each dollar invested in fertilizer.

When producing sandy loams where legumes have not been grown recently, an application of 150 to 250 pounds of 14-63 is the best recommendation. Where more organic matter is indicated and where married manure and manure have been applied in management programs, 150 to 250 pounds of 2-12-6 does a better job. Oats or barley seeded with clover or alfalfa on the better sandy soils will do well on 250 to 350 pounds of 0-12-12, as the legumes do not need the nitrogen but will need more potash.

Six-Point Poultry Program Under Way

Poultrymen numbering 147,000 in Michigan are negotiating a little matter of $3,600,000 annually as extra profit possible by making their flocks produce better quality eggs. On that premise, J. M. Moore, specialist in the poultry department at Michigan State College, is conducting a six-point quality improvement program to help boost the state's egg income above the present federal-state crop reporting estimate of $28,000,000 a year.

THE FARMINGTON STATE BANK

Farmington, Mich.

Mr. and Mrs. Omar Lutes, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dixon, left on an auto trip Sunday. They were the guests of the well-known poet and writer, Mr. Carl Sandburg, and his wife, at their home, the Chickaming Farm, situated in Harbort, on Lake Michigan.

The picture "Dark Sands" was much enjoyed Friday evening at the school. Dancing followed and the patrons were well satisfied with the evening's entertainment. Mrs. Robert Fredericks of 18321 Maplewood was hostess at a luncheon for the Sunshine Sisters Tuesday, April 30, at 1 p. m. Plans for a Mother and Daughter banquet were made. The date will be announced later.

Mr. E. P. Cook of Maplewood has returned from Chicago where he has been visiting one of his sons.

Emil Teireault, in the eighth grade, won second place in the essay contest sponsored by the National Sojourners, Detroit Chapter No. 1. His essay was entitled "James Monroe and the Monroe Doctrine." Rural school children from 25 schools throughout Wayne county took part in the contest. First prize was taken by Shirley Cramer of Elm School. Both winners received engraved certificates. Shirley was given a medal and Knit a book on flags.

Mr. Hall, president of the P. T. A., with Mrs. Hall and other members of the organization, including Madeline H. Benoit, Latis, Bates.
