PITCH, ASPHALT EXTINGUISH FIRE BOMBS

Effective control of magnesium incendiary fire bombs by powdered pitch or asphalt is a newly developed process which may relieve one of war's most dangerous destructive weapons, was explained and demonstrated at the Industrial Protection Institute sponsored by the Michigan Council of Defense at Detroit this week.

More than 3,000 Michigan Industrial, business, and medical leaders as well as high governmental, Army and Navy officials looked on as representatives of the U.S. Bureau of mines spread a layer of powdered pitch on a flaming magnesium bomb. The pitch melted, sealing the burning metal with an airtight blanket, thereby smothering the flames.

The experts pointed out that if the burning bomb were on a wooden floor (for example, an attic floor), the procedure is to spread a layer of powdered pitch on the floor near the bomb and then roll the bomb on this layer. Then cover with more powdered pitch. Inasmuch as the bomb is smothered, it becomes harmless.

Complete information on civilian defense, including training courses and handbooks for volunteers, will be available in libraries throughout the State under an agreement reached between the Office of Civilian Defense and the Michigan Council of Defense, Lt. Col. Harold A. Furlong, administrator, announced.

"From now on, each municipal library will receive all literature directly from OGD headquarters in Washington," Furlong said. "It is planned to supply the libraries with all previously issued material, so that a complete set of references will be available to study to the general public.

In addition to requests from men and women interested in familiarizing themselves with opportunities to serve in civilian defense, many high school and college students also have asked for information to use in their classroom work," Furlong explained.

What to save and not to save: Tin cans: Not unless a local dealer wants them; bottle tops: not now; hats on, perhaps; razor blades: not now; street car or railroad rails: emphatically yes; rubber heels, no; crepe rubber soles, yes; tubes: toothpaste and delicate cosmetics: come in tubes 95 per cent tin and these tubes should be saved but shaving cream tubes (they contain lead) should not be saved; fats and grease: a national campaign will be started later on to save them, but they need not be preserved for the present; ornamental railings, etc. no need to junk these until the need is much greater than now.
