WHERE AXIS WENT TOO FAR WITH BRAZIL

NEW YORK—Julio Berruti, head of the Brazilian Section Coordinator of International Affairs, is shown in his New York office pointing to colleague Dr. Ramundo Magalhães where Axis submarines sank Brazilian ships, precipitating the crisis that last Saturday caused Brazil to declare war on Germany and Italy. President Roosevelt sent a message to President Getulio Vargas of Brazil assuring him of his confidence in "The success of our common cause."

HIT ATTRACTIVE COME TO THE CIVIC THEATRE

As timely as tomorrow's newspaper headlines is "Remember Pearl Harbor," the drama which opens Friday at the Civic Theatre. Magnificently enacted by a splendid cast including Donald M. Barry, Allan Curtis and Fay McKenzie, this new motion picture is one of the most vivid and entertaining films produced in many years. Barry, Curtis and McKenzie are seen as three soldier pals stationed at a U. S. Army post in the Philippines. Barry is the "rugged indi-vidualist" of the trio whose blithe disregard for rules and regulations keeps not only himself, but the other two as well, constantly in hot water.

On Sunday, Monday and Tuesday the hit attraction at the Civic Theatre is "My Gal Sal" with Victor Mature and Rita Hayworth. The technician pictures based on the life of Paul Dresser, a member of a talented family and brother of Theodore Dreiser. Dresser's forte was music, and Victor Mature plays the role in the film. The role of the girl who inspires Dresser to music, and Victor Mature plays the role in the film. The role of the girl who inspires Dresser to music, and Victor Mature plays the role in the film.

Dresser's career, as portrayed in "My Gal Sal" is absolutely authentic since the material for the story was furnished by the author's brother. The early medicine show background of Dresser during which he played a banjo in various midwest travelling shows, his struggle to get his songs published, and finally his big success in New York where he eventually had the town at his feet, have been strikingly recreated on the screen.

"The Falcon Takes Over" is on the Civic Screen next Wednesday and Thursday. This picture is hailed as one of the year's most gripping offerings with an exceptionally suspenseful plot as its basis, and highlighted with exquisite romance and comedy in contrast to its four murders. Starring in the cast are Lynn Bari, George Sanders, Thomas Gleason and Allen Jenkins.

The Drifter

By HELEN V. KERR
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

"GEESSE are all heading south. Time you went out, Pete, and saw the sights," Joe Green advised with a supercilious grin.

Pete thought of his friends, seated up and down the river. They liked him, with his kind eyes and his quiet ways, and Pete needed to be liked. He let his glance stray around the walls of his neat little log cabin before answering amiably. "No. It's better here."

"I got a swell new girl waiting for me," Joe boasted with malicious satisfaction, knowing that a girl Pete couldn't forget was the cause of his flight from civilization.

Joe enjoyed talking to Pete. Such a timid, puny fellow—a drifter who had settled up here in the wilderness to hide his failure in the outside world. Joe felt as important looking it over him as when, resplendent in city clothes, he talked some poor, dreaming widow into trusting him with her savings. He was a good talker, was Joe—"Beautiful Joe," people called him. With a few the name was a tribute, for he was handsome in a dark, masculine way, but there were many on whose lips it was a sneer, or worse. To fight he was heading down river on his way outside for the winter, enough glittering ore samples in his mackinaw pocket to lure another summer's comfort for him from the too-boring Pete had shared his supper with him, not out of friendship, but because it is the way of the north country.

"She's mighty pretty, according to her picture," Joe continued on a favorite theme. "Sny, I expect, but I can melt 'em," he said with a coarse laugh. "Fanny how I come to get acquainted. Picked up a ring in Vancouver one day, a queer Indian thing."

He drew the silver band from his pocket, and handing it to Pete, went on with his story. "Out of curiosity I put an ad in all the city papers, and a girl in San Francisco answered it, saying she'd given the ring to someone who'd proved unworthy, and could she please have it back. Just for fun I wrote her I was having it mended, so I couldn't send it yet and told her how I sympathized with her, and she fell for hard. Came right back with a long letter, thanking me, and telling how she knew the person—Harry was his name; you can see it in the headline writers. Under his direction, the United States employment service will register applicants for war jobs in 1,500 offices all over the country. If you want to give the Axis the axe, see your nearest USES office."

In its great war production effort, the steel industry of America this year will consume about three times as much scrap iron and steel as it needed in 1938. HURRY IN THE SCRAP.

"Not your usual sort, is she, Joe?" Pete commented in a slow drawl as he reached for his ride from the wall and set to cleaning it. Joe leered at his host. "They're all my sort, if I like 'em. Anyway, she can learn. I sent her my picture—told her I was working on my mine, Geo. I laughed at the things she wrote about that." He pulled out a letter and read, "You look so splendid and clean, using your fine strength to get riches out of the earth, not one of those folk as most of us do—." What she don't know, won't hurt her, eh? Now, this fellow she was so crazy about, he made the mistake of letting her know too much. He couldn't make enough money to get married on, so he started doing a little thieving from the firm he was bookkeeper for. But she got suspicious when he began throwing money around freer than usual, and then she asked him about it and the poor sap went and confessed!"

Joe and known he was roiling Pete with his scornful recital of Harry's incompetence, but he had failed to observe how his host kept nervously fingering the hammer of his rifle, or to catch the bitterness in Pete's mild voice as he asked, "Think she'll like your occupation?"

"Huh! Before she gets wise to me, I'll be through with her," declared Joe.

A least self-satisfied man must have recognized the intensity behind Pete's next question. "Going to break her heart all over again, are you?"

"Aw, she'll get over it. They all do."

"She wouldn't," said Pete with quiet emphasis. Then he leaned forward and uttered a solemn pronouncement. "Jee, you're rotten clean through. With the help of your good looks you've spent your whole life burning people who couldn't stand it, but I'll be damned if you're going to hurt that girl!"

Before Joe could do more than gasp in astonishment Pete had laid his rifle to his shoulder and with steady aim shot him through the heart. Then he put down his gun, took the girl's letter from his victim's hand, and scribbled a note on the back to Corporal Bryce of the Mounted Police. It read:

"Jim Bryce—I killed Beautiful Joe. You'll be doing this lady a favor if you'll write and tell her. Joe Green was killed in an explosion at his mine, and send her this ring. But don't say anything about me. She never heard of me. Thanks."
