LEGAL NOTICES

YAN WINKLE & YAN WINKLE, 2335 First State & Michigan, Bank Bldg., Howell, Michigan. STATE OF MICHIGAN. THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE COUNTY OF OAKLAND. No. 23168. GEORGE W. KEELER and MIRA WINKER, Plaintiffs, vs. THOMAS GARDNER, JR., JOHUA FLINT, JR., LACKWOOD CLARK, and their unknown heirs and assigns, Defendants.

It is appearing from the sworn bill of complaint in the above entitled cause that the plaintiffs have been able to ascertain whether their defendants are alive or dead, or where they may reside, or if they have any personal representatives or heirs living, or where they or any of them may reside, or whether the title, interest, claim, lien or possible right of these defendants have been acquired by purchase or otherwise, whether such title, interest, claim, lien or possible right has been disposed of by will by the said defendants. And it further appearing that the plaintiffs do not know and have been unable after diligent search and inquiry to ascertain the names of the persons who are included as defendants without being named.

Upon motion, therefore of Yan Winkle & Yan Winkle, attorneys for plaintiffs, it is ordered that the above named defendants and their unknown heirs, devisees, legatees and assigns, cause their appearance to be entered before within three months from the date hereof, and that in default thereof said bill be taken as confessed by said defendants and each and all of them.

Ancient Man's Feeding Habits Were Scientific

The feeding habits of ancient man were sound and scientific in view of our present state of knowledge. This is the conclusion of Dr. Lloyd Arnold of Chicago, authority on nutrition, writing in the American Journal of Dietetics. The significance of Dr. Arnold's pronouncement can hardly be exaggerated. It is an admission that primitive peoples, wholly ignorant of the effects of various food substances on the human body, happened by trial-and-error on a diet which cannot be greatly improved even by present day biochemists.

Primitive man, hunting down animals of his environment for their collective wisdom concerning the needs of the wild wheat, barley, millet and rice, later employing the milk of domesticated animals, and ultimately cultivating the grape for its wine and vinegar, had assembled the essentials of a diet which is now known to encourage reproduction, induce growth and maintain health. It is in their knowledge of the value of vinegar that Dr. Arnold finds the greatest reason to marvel. He says: "When viewed as a whole, that is when their total available food is taken into consideration, one cannot but be impressed with the acidified diet ingested by these ancient people living together in communities in cradles of civilization."

Puppet Punch Has Place In Hearts of All People

Puritan or pagan, young or old, rich or poor, we all have an indulgent corner in our hearts for the villain, and no disturber of the conventions has had a more popular and outrageous career than the celebrated puppet, Punch. But this lawless swashbuckler seems to have quite disappeared from our circus sideshows, country fairs and parks, writes Wilbur Hancey Stevens in American Digest. For 40 years I have collected printed accounts of his career and, in running through them recently, was surprised at the constant recurrence of the history of Punch and his ancestors. As with most of our folkways, Punch's progenitors originated in ancient religious festivals in pagan times, and their beginnings are quite obscured by the mists of antiquity. Punch, as we know him, probably had his prototype in the Roman clown, Maccus, of whom a portrait in bronze has been found having the identical features of the prince of villains, hooked beak, nutcracker chin, and all.

Posture Habits

"Posture means not only the position in which the child holds himself and walks about, but also the effect which that position has on all the child's internal organs, making them work in a healthy fashion if the posture is good and interfering with their healthy working if it is poor." Dr. Royal S. Haynes, who has been studying posture for more than an external expression of beauty, maintains in his article, entitled "The Runabout-Posture and the Preschool Child," that with proper care before and after the child's birth, an abundance of exercise through opportunity for free bodily movement, and proper guidance the runabout child will gain excellent and lasting results in formulating good habits in posture.

The New Walnut Shell Game

Walnut shells, formerly a waste product, are now being ground and used in a variety of ways. Commercial uses for the ground shells include hard and soft rubber compounds, linoleums, felt roofing paper, synthetic resin plastics, flooring and stairway mixes, abrasive soaps, filler in dynamite, and air-cell voids in fire bricks. Other possible uses include buffing rouge for gold and silver, tooth and face powders, and fur cleaners. This is another fine example of what can be done with industrial research to make agriculture more profitable by opening up new markets for products which would otherwise be wasted.

Reliable Weather Sign

The halo that is frequently seen around the moon, and around the sun too, is a reliable weather sign of an anticyclone coming bad weather. High above the earth the winds blow the tops of the coming storm clouds. These winds have greater velocity than those at lower levels and blow the cirrus, or rain, clouds ahead of the storm. At these excessive altitudes the temperature is so low that the clouds are really formed of ice crystals, and though practically invisible, the moon's light shining through is refracted in such a way that a ring is formed. The size of it depends upon the optical properties of the ice crystals.

The Weatherman Says

When the weatherman says it will rain tomorrow, that it will not rain, that we shall have snow, that the temperature will be high or low, or that a wind storm is approaching, the weatherman is not guessing; he makes these predictions by means of various delicate instruments that are kept in very weather forecast station in the United States. He knows the nature of weather conditions in various parts of the country.
