THIS AND THAT . . .

Before too many days go by, we should be hearing those wonderful frogs I've been talking about for so many weeks.

But that frog will not only herald the approach of spring, but of house cleaning time, too.

That same frog also means rain, mud, etc. But we mustn't forget that we need all that to thaw everything out.

I wonder if there won't be a medal of some kind for the family that escapes the flu bug in all its forms?

Guess we're doomed to become a nation of vegetarians, whether we like it or not. According to some folks, we'll be better off for it.

Put Graham crackers together with powdered sugar icing, the other day, for the children's lunches and it went over in a big way. Not only a "quicker" but definitely a saver of shortening and sugar.

In the Madison County. Diagnosis an overdose of sleeping powder. But Douglas Selby, the neighbor who had registered as "Charles" selected D.A., suspected more than that. He sent for the minister's wife. She said the dead man was not her husband. Then Selby knew that he faced a case of murder.

Who was the little clergyman who had registered as "Charles" in the Madison County, Nevada? What was he doing in Madison City? Why had he been murdered? By whom? Doug Selby set to work to find the answers. Everything seemed to be against him, the local paper, which had fought against his action on the reform ticket, imported an expert crime reporter to blast him and force his recall for incompetence. Such witnesses as there were wouldn't talk. As the feverish days went by, the clues did seem to point against a murderer, but there wasn't any evidence on which a conviction could be secured.

Finally Doug was given an ultimatum: Solve the Brower case by four, this afternoon, or get out of office! The young D.A. then prevailed on only that he could take it, but also that he could shift it. The first of the author's new "D.A." series.

Night Flight—Antoine De Saint-Exupery. Night Flight is a story of the early days of commercial flying in South America, when planes were still comparatively crude, and flying through the night was in its infancy. The narrative pivots on Riviere, chief of the airport at Buenos Aires, a man who grows his pilotes and ground crews relentlessly, knowing that sometimes death would come, knowing that the mail must go through.

Antoine De Saint-Exupery was perhaps the first to write of airplanes and night, of pilotes and ground crews, with the full wealth of poetic and imaginative vision. Certainly there is no other writer in the world today who has been able to create in fiction with such vitality and tenderness the new world of men and machines of the air.

A WORD TO THE WIVES

Hello there—as the day comes to a close, we realize that they are turned another page in our Book of Life, and remember that it brings us one page closer to the end.

To some, that is a sad event and they most reluctantly let go of the day—the day of pilotes and ground crews, with the full wealth of poetic and imaginative vision. Certainly there is no other writer in the world today who has been able to create in fiction with such vitality and tenderness the new world of men and machines of the air.

THE GARDEN PATH

Carrots are one of the most versatile vegetables that we have. Besides being adaptable to many different ways of cooking, they are good grated or ground raw in salads, then you can serve them: cut in strips on the relish dish. Almost anyone who will eat vegetables at all will eat carrots. And the latest news about them is the wonderful work they do in promoting better eyesight, due to the large quantity of Vitamin C found in them. Did you know that the Army Air Corp, when a candidate fails to pass the sight requirements for enlistment by only a slight margin, often suggests a steady diet of carrots to bring the sight up to necessary standards? Well it is true. Do you know that four states furnish the bulk of the carrots that are marketed in the United States — New York, California, Texas and Arizona. All of them are far from the center of the country, and if every home gardener would grow enough carrots for his own use it would relieve the transportation congestion in a small way.

One of the main essentials in growing good carrots is a soil that has been deeply prepared so the roots can penetrate and develop without hindrance. Also there must be an ample supply of food in the soil so that growth will be steady and rapid. When preparing the seedbed, use one pound of complete plant food for each twenty-five feet of row. When the soil is prepared, apply the plant food in a strip approximately six inches wide, then rake it into the top soil before planting the seed.

Some leading varieties of carrots are: Stump-rooted varieties; Chantenay, Danvers, Half-Long and Nantes; New streamlined variety; Imperator (an All-American Selection).

Sow seed thinly early in the spring. Depth of planting depends to some degree on the character of the soil and the moisture conditions at time of planting, but covering about one-half inch deep is usually satisfactory. Using seed of high quality and spacing it carefully will eliminate some thinning, but if the seeding is too thin, you may not get a satisfactory germination.

Germination will take ten to fifteen days, and crop should be ready for use in 8 or 9 weeks. Thin out seedlings two inches apart for smaller and earlier varieties, and 3 to 4 inches apart for the later and larger types. Cultivate frequently, and deeply to secure smooth, straight roots. Since carrots germinate slowly, it is a good idea to sow radish seed in the row also, as a row marker. Space rows 12 to 18 inches apart. Make succession sowings every two weeks up to early July. For winter use, make a sowing about the middle of June, which will make good sized roots before winter sets in. One caution—do harvest carrots, at least the streamlined type, when they are young and tender. Late crop grown for storing, of course must be more mature.

The Mouse's Tale
Private William J. Monroe of Camp Roberts, Calif., built a flytrap and placed it in the drill yard near the mess hall. Later checkup on the trap's efficiency revealed a total of: A. No flies. B. Two mice. Private Monroe is now hard at work designing a better mousetrap—to catch flies.
