Morale Builder for a Cold Morning

THE best way to send the family off to work with their morale high and a feeling that all is well with the world is to get before them a tempting, nourishing breakfast.

And what could fill the bill better than these piping hot cups of full-strength coffee and this mouth-watering Bacon Corn Bread. Of course, you want to have that coffee really good. Measure coffee and water accurately and use enough coffee... at least two level tablespoons to every 8 ounces measuring cup of water.

Everybody loves their morning coffee and there is really nothing like it to give you that needed lift and send you on your way with the pep and energy you all need these days. There is plenty of coffee now so we can all enjoy its rich, flavorful goodness... and have another cup! You'll enjoy this Bacon Corn Bread, too. It's rich in good protein because it contains soy flour, yellow cornmeal, eggs, milk and bacon. You'll want to try it. Here is the way to make it.

Bacon Corn Bread
1 cup sifted flour
1 cup sifted cornmeal
1 cup yellow cornmeal
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup sugar
1 egg, well beaten
1/2 cup milk
2 tablespoons melted drippings
2 strips bacon

Mix and sift the dry ingredients. Combine beaten egg and milk, and stir into dry ingredients. Stir in melted drippings. Place in greased shallow square or oblong cake pan, and cover with cut bacon. Bake in moderate hot oven (425° F.) 25 to 30 minutes. Cut in squares and serve hot.

Note: The white flour may be increased to 1 cup, and the soy flour omitted.

Long, Long Ago — Alexander Woolcott. This is a book that the public has been demanding, and Alexander Woolcott has been promising for the past ten years. It is a collection of Woolcott's own writings in the style of "White Horse Burns," and it could have been published long since. The manuscript was ready and the audience was waiting with mouths watering like a regiment of Oliver Twists, but as long as Woolcott lived, he wrote; and as long as he wrote, he added to and changed this book. Had he not died, he could have invented his ingenious excuses for procrastination for another ten years. But it is doubtful if even then he could have made a better book of it than it is now.

It is a generous collection of the pieces Woolcott wrote for a wide variety of uses during the productive decade of his life. There are long pieces about events, institutions and especially people that have aroused the author's enthusiasm, touched his heart or his sense of humor, or, on occasion, kindled his formidable wrath. There are several special sections — Friends and Neighbors, Ways that Are Dark, Shouts and Murmurs. In one part his broadcasts as Town Crier are represented; another brings forth his pieces suggested by books; another those called forth by the theater.

This is Woolcott speaking—in the best-known and best-loved voice in America.

Behind The Steel Wall — Arvid Fredborg. Few people in America would have expected to get such accounts until after the war was over, for normally you do not receive very clear reports from the stronghold of the enemy. Arvid Fredborg, a correspondent hitherto little known outside his native Sweden, has scooped the world.

In the years since the last Americans in Germany packed their bags, the United States entered the war; Rommel rolled up to the border of Egypt and was hurled back into the Mediterranean; Stalingrad was besieged and did not fall; the Anglo-American armies attacked the continent of Europe; the Russians pushed a head mile after mile; the heart of Germany was bombed night after night; the tide of battle finally turned.

And how have these and like events affected the German government and the German people? We have wondered, we have guessed—now we can know. Fredborg was stationed in Berlin until this last summer, working in close touch with the authorities, drawing upon private channels of information, watching the leaders in action, seeing for himself how the private citizen and the private soldier have been weathering the storm. He stayed until the last possible moment—which was until only a few months ago—and he got out safely with his notes intact. He writes not as a belittler, but as an onlooker deeply concerned for the future welfare of Europe.

"They Sent Me To Iceland"—Jane Goodell. Just after Pearl Harbor, eleven American girls sailed for a strange destination — an island where the sun shines at midnight, the volcanoes are active and the men outnumber the women five hundred to one.

That was Iceland when Jane Goodell and her ten companions arrived to undertake the work of establishing Red Cross recreation centers for the troops. They were the first group of Red Cross workers to be sent overseas in this war, and outside of Army nurses, they were the only American girls among thousands of soldiers, sailors, marines, airmen and merchant seamen.

"They Sent Me To Iceland" is the first account of the men on one of the loneliest outposts of this war, and of the girls who tackled with courage, humor and energy their appointment in Iceland.

Men are dying...are you buying?

IF YOU'RE inclined to say, "I can't afford any more Bonds," just take another look at the casualty lists.

At least $100 extra in Bonds — over and above your regular buying — is needed as your part in putting over the Fourth War Loan. At least $100, $200, $300, or $500 if you can possibly scrape it up.

Look at those grim lists in today's paper. Buy your Bonds while the names are still fresh in your mind.

Let's all BACK THE ATTACK!
