Nest Over Winter
Many of the fungi and bacteria that cause plant diseases nest over winter in last season's plant refuse. Burning the debris is the surest way to kill these fungi and bacteria. Changing the location of crops in the garden from year to year is another preventive against plant diseases.

Brucellosis Infections
The most common method of spread of Brucellosis through the mouth and the digestive system. Cattle usually get the disease by licking an aborting cow or diseased afterbirth, also by eating infected feed, grazing on infected pastures and drinking infected water (streams and permanent troughs).
