As a newspaperwoman, Miss Hahn was on the spot to witness the great events that changed the land of paddy fields and temple bells to battlefields of thunder and pain. But she was also an adopted member of a Chinese famiy and saw those things as at family and saw those things as an inhabitant, in terms of the people involved. She knew an impressive variety of these people: Chinese journalists, British diplomata, Japanese agents, American businessmen, intellectuals, crooks, dignitaries, and adventurers. You will also find out a lot about Miss Hahn herself, for she writes informally and with disarming intimacy. She relates how she came to write her famous biography of the Soong sisters and finally how she was interned by the Japanese and exchanged on the Gripabolm. "Châna to Me" is enthralling history, rich in its picture of China in transition from peace to war.
