Braslian History
Brazil's history began in the early 15th century with the country a Portuguese colony. It continued with the colony becoming a kingdom in 1815 and then an empire in 1822. A revolution deposed the emperor in 1889, and Brazil became a republic. Within the next half century the constitution was changed three times. The first one, made effective in 1891, was virtually nullified by revolution in 1930, and a new constitution was promulgated in 1934. A third constitution was issued in 1937.

Many of Michigan's 625,000 men and women in the military services are coming home soon — now at a low tide pace only 10,000 monthly — to a Pandora's box of problems.

It's a new world, promised for so long, and with a bewildering and confusing flood of new ideas. Just as atomic energy is being hailed as the "greatest invention of all times," to quote the words of a University of Chicago scientist in the current issue of Survey Graphic, so some American leaders insist we are at the threshold of near Utopia itself. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, employed the phrase "new industrial revolution" in his Labor Day address this month. The implications are obvious.

A number of years ago Dr. Lloyd Douglas, the one-time Ann Arbor minister who attained fame as an author, pointed out that the history of civilization has been the graph of a series of setbacks and reverses. He said we have been striving for centuries to free ourselves from the necessity of physical work and we have just about accomplished it to our own surprise, thanks to technological miracles of science.

Our latest ascent to a new plane is sharp and difficult, he said. We must adjust ourselves to the surge upward or fall by the wayside.

There are historians who maintain that our current problems are the by-products of this new climb upward, and the words they use to describe it are "social revolution." Certainly the staggering cost and waste of modern war, which has weakened England as never before, are major factors in the current swing to more private enterprise to state socialism.

The veterans, once they have made their own readjustments to civilian life, will face the immediate choice of a continuation of the American free, competitive system which has been responsible for the highest living standards in the world today or a fling at state socialism with its Utopian hope of a full dinner pail, individual security, better health, and better everything else, all at the bounty of the government and thus at the expense of everyone, rich and poor.

There is some logic in the argument that the cost of modern war, such as the 270 billions, which have been piled on top of American national indebtedness, may inevitably push the nation into state socialism.

The private enterprise system, faced with such a challenge, is on trial as never before.

What will the veterans do? The decision will be fateful.

The Michigan veteran will come home to an agriculture which has experienced war-time inflation of land prices.

More farm land changed hands in Michigan in 1943 than in any previous year on record. In fact, many farms have been sold at prices higher than their long-time earning power justifies. Prices last year were 45 per cent higher than in 1939. The spiral continues upward.

Veterans will return to a highly mechanized agriculture in which one good tractor now does the work of three teams of horses. The same machine, or perhaps one adapted for small acreage, will enable the veteran to escape the insecurity of the city and to possess a small suburban farm where he can attain some degree of independence from the rise and fall of employment.

Huge housing and road construction programs, "victory" garden experience, new popularity of frozen food lockers — these are additional factors which will accelerate the trend from city to country.

The service industries in Michigan — such as transportation, retailing, resorts, professions, marketing and local government — offer opportunities to veterans.

In 1930 the service industries formed 47.2 percent of the nation's total income as compared with 39.2 percent in 1920. Economists maintain that if this country is to have a higher and higher standard of living after the war, the movement into the service occupations should be encouraged. Certainly factories alone can't be responsible for full employment. The big bad industrialist, much booed around by labor agitators, affects less than one-third of the nation's total economy.

Service industries now dominate both manufacturing and agriculture as the greatest single factor in American life today. To illustrate it: Michigan's resort business is second only to industry in annual dollar income. Like agriculture, it is a service industry.

There's no reconversion needed for service industries unless it is HUMAN reconversion, the psychological need for sane thinking about our new problems.

Finally, just as the veteran must solve the problem of individual security, so he must solve the problem of national security.

The atomic bomb, our jet-propelled planes, plus V-1 and V-2 robot bombs, have shattered illusions of geographic security and insularity from world troubles. Such is the thesis of Senator Arthur Vandenberg's appeal for American participation in the United Nations Council.

The end of the war, opening floodgates for release of war-time responsibilities and restrictions, has already prompted politicians to advocate abandonment of the American responsibilities in Europe and the Far Pacific. "Let the French, British and Chinese do it!" is the cry. "Bring our boys home!" When the boys do come home and we're all for it, they will still face the problem of securing peace for their children. We hope they do a better job than the veterans of World War I did — and didn't do — and we served overseas in that party. Pandora's box of home life is being let loose. Consequently when you analyze some of the problems which will greet the Michigan veteran in 1945 and 1946. So give them a helping hand. And hang onto your hat while we try the next curve in the post-war coaster that is just ahead:

Lily Trouble
Improper planting depth is the cause of many lily failures. Rooting habit more than bulb size determines the depth for planting. Some lilies form roots only at the base of the bulb; these must be planted near the surface, as deep planting weakens the up growth and decreases flower production. Other lilies make a second set of roots on the stem between the top of the bulb and the surface of the ground. They require deep planting, as the stem roots cannot form in the upper inch or two of soil which, throughout most of the summer, is dry as dust. Another common cause of failure is lime in the soil. A few lilies like lime, or at least tolerate it, but most of them succeed best in a slightly acid soil. Improper drainage causes much lily trouble. While a few are actually swamp lovers, most of them demand excellent drainage.

Bureau of Reclamation Aids Western Farmers

It was on June 17, 1932, that the bureau of reclamation's work was launched with the signing of the Reclamation Act by Pres. Theodore Roosevelt. Outstanding among the bureau's accomplishments are:

A western "empire" of more than 4,000,000 acres of productive farm lands — an area considerably larger than the state of Connecticut with a value of more than $750,000,000 — claimed from the deserts of 17 western states.

Farm homes and livelihood for nearly 600,000 families whose annual crops brought them more than $111,000,000 last year.

Some 300 cities and towns within the reclaimed area supporting nearly a million persons with property estimated to be worth $1,500,000,000.

Power, a by-product, serving war and other industries, cities, towns and farm homes.

Finds Purple Disturbing
A physician interested for many years in the study of color effects on the human body and mind, points out that purple causes the greatest emotional upsets, though its effects will vary with the individuals. It causes uneasiness and mental restlessness, according to his finding.

ANNOUNCING ANOTHER NEW FROZEN FOOD LOCKER SERVICE

We take pride in the fact that we were the first to bring the modern convenience and luxury of frozen foods to our community when we installed our frozen food locker plant here in 1941. Through the facilities of our modern plant you have been able to enjoy fresh frozen foods the year around.

Now, as the result of new scientific improvements in the frozen food field, we are again able to offer you the latest advance in frozen foods facilities. We have for your enjoyment

Post War Frozen Food HOME LOCKERS

WHICH WILL FIT SNUGLY INTO YOUR KITCHEN AND GIVE YOU
FROZEN FOOD STORAGE IN YOUR OWN HOME.

Our new frozen food Home Locker is a beautifully finished white enameled kitchen table with a conveniently hinged top under which you will be able to store 150 pounds of frozen food right where you need it most — in your own kitchen! This ultra-modern convenience is so greatly in demand that we must schedule our deliveries in the same order we receive your reservation. We urge you to drop in at your earliest convenience so we may explain this new frozen food equipment we have obtained for our community.
