BAILEY RELEASES TIPS ON WINTER CONCRETE WORK

Farmers may do concrete work in cold weather if precautions are taken, Karl D. Bailey, County agricultural agent said today. There is no need to stop all construction work until warmer weather.

Heat hastens the hardening of concrete, but cold retards it. In mixing concrete when temperatures are below 40 degrees, sand, pebbles and water should be heated. Since the cement forms only a small volume of the materials in the batch, it need not be heated.

The county agricultural agent suggests that sand and gravel can be heated by piling over an old metal culvert pipe, a section of smokstack or some other improvised firebox. With a fire kindled inside, the heat soon distributes the heat through the material if it is raked or moved about to get all portions heated equally.

Water may be heated in a large kettle or in a boiler. Water and materials should not be heated to a temperature higher than 150 degrees.

Snow and ice must be removed from the forms and ground upon which the concrete mixture is placed. As soon as the concrete is placed in the forms it should be given some protection to retain the heat. Covers of canvas, straw or hay are often used for this purpose. The protection should be left on for four or five days.

To test to see if the work has sufficiently hardened. Mr. Bailey suggests you pour hot water on the concrete. If properly hardened, concrete will not be affected by the hot water. If frozen, concrete will be softened by the heat. Test before removing forms.

Calcium chloride may be used to speed hardening, but not more than two pounds of calcium chloride per sack of cement should be used. It should be dissolved in water before being placed in the mixer.
