WASHINGTON DIGEST

they made their various moves upon the Koreans found they had to deal with a system that had already been set up, based on the democratic choice of a leader for a group of perhaps 20 homes which, in turn, chose their representatives for larger groups. Dr. Rhee said he found his people were much more familiar with these processes than he thought they could be even though he had followed their activities so closely through all these years. Then Dr. Rhee went on to explain that with cooperation of the military government, at least five attempts had been made to set up a national government; that each time the Communists had blocked it by refusing to join and because of the directives under which the military government was forced to operate - no government was permitted which the Communists did not participate.
"They (the Communists) claim they have 20,000 members in the southern area - what right have they to interfere with the rights of 13 million Koreans in the southern zone?" asks Dr. Rhee.
In the secret agreement at Yalta, Dr. Rhee asserts: "President Roosevelt stated that Manchuria and Northern Korea be placed in the zone of the Soviets. This was contrary to the spirit of the Atlantic Charter and the other agreements up to that time. When the American people realize this, I am sure sentiment will develop that will make it possible for Korea to become a nation again. I am going back to Korea with that hope."

SENATE BATHED IN RIVALRY

There is a distinctive burst of political rumor often buried in that remarkable and largely unread (and frequently tardy) document, the Congressional Record.
The Republican recommendation that senators meet in formal sessions only three times a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, devoting the other two days to committee work recently touched off a typical exchange between Republicans and Democrats on the senate floor. Both parties conferred lightly with the names of founding fathers.
Majority Leader Wallace White of Maine began by pointing that an exception to the Monday-Wednesday-Friday rule should perhaps be made for Lincoln's birthday (which falls on Wednesday this year) so that Republican Senators could, as he put it, "have opportunity to go to their homes and elsewhere to make their customary, and I think, proper, speeches on Lincoln's birthday." He added that provisions, too, might be made for Washington's birthday.
Senator White then recalled that the Democrats usually have either a Jackson Day or Jefferson Day dinner, for which they might want to be excused from the senate.
Minority Leader Barkley was agreeable. Said he: "So far as Lincoln Day absenteeism is concerned, we have no objection to any deviation from this program (the NWP rule) that would permit our friends to get back to Lincoln."

Tomato Development

During grandmother's childhood the tomato was known as the devil's apple and little boys and girls were warned against eating it. From that beginning the tomato has evolved into a food of great value nutritionally and commercially. It is eaten raw, cooked and canned and is used in making juice, paste, ketchup, soups and combined with other foods in the making of other products.

be no difficulty about arranging for Washington's birthday for the group's birthday.
So far as Jackson is concerned, the Democrats have already celebrated Jackson Day on the 8th of January, today, which is the day of the Battle of New Orleans.
Mr. White: I think the senator from Kentucky is celebrating it now.
Mr. Barkley: But in April I think it is planned to have a number of Jefferson Day celebrations throughout the country and I am sure that Jefferson and Lincoln and Washington and Jackson will all be maintained upon an equal footing.
Mr. Tobey: I'd like to say for the benefit of my friend the senator from Kentucky that I hope his statement which I shall designate as Exhibit A, is evidence that the great party to which he belongs, of which he has been majority leader in the senate for so many years, and so successfully, will be bound to return to the principles and teachings and tenets of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. Barkley: I will say to the senator that we have never departed from them, because Jefferson was the outstanding liberal of his day, and we have always adhered to the liberal policies which were advocated by the original liberal, Thomas Jefferson, which were not altogether dissimilar to the liberalism of the founder of the Republican party, Abraham Lincoln.

The Record records as follows: Mr. Barkley: I think the clearest party gets back to Lincoln the nearer it will come to Jefferson. I think there will
