

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Sam Helps with the Dishwashing

Dropped in at the Abernathy's just the other evening—and there was Sam, out in the kitchen with an apron on, helping his misadventure wash the supper dishes. (And then I learned later he'd helped cook the supper, too.)

and the mealtime chores is sort of a bond between them... like sharing that friendly glass of beer together, when the work is done. It's one of those little all-important things in marriage.

From where I sit, the time that a man and wife can spend with each other in this busy world today is all too precious. And the more things they can do together, the better.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

presidents took vacations—Theodore Roosevelt "went home" to his beloved Sagamore Hill on Oyster Bay with a secretary or two. President Taft went to Beverly, Mass. When President Wilson went to Cornish, N. H., it was for rest and recuperation. In 1916 he chose the imposing Shadow Lawn in New Jersey and by that time the war was impending and his staff went with him.

President Harding didn't want to "get away". He wanted people, lots of them, around him—also 52 cards.

President Coolidge, too, it was said, didn't know what to do with a vacation but he made as geographically varied a selection of summer White Houses as any president. First it was Swampscott where, as one dispatch put it, he was "tethered" to a telephone wire. As a matter of fact no telephone wires actually entered "White Court," the great colonial mansion perched on the rim of New England's rock-bound coast, but the telephone did and he made regular trips to nearby Lynn where the offices were located.

In 1926 he chose an Adirondack "camp," near Paul-Smith's. One of those primitive places millionaires build in the wilderness equipped with all the comforts of a modern hotel. Kirkwood Camp, owned by Irvin Kirkwood, a newspaper publisher, was such a place.

Only last week I heard a story about Coolidge at Paul Smith's from Col. Oliver Newman, sometime newspaperman and later a commissioner of the District of Columbia, who is now fiscal advisor to the Dominican republic and who was here on his annual vacation. It seems Frederick William Wile, then a Washington correspondent, was making an automobile trip with his wife and dropped in at Paul Smith's. The President invited them to stay for a meal. It was rather hard going making conversation, as always with silent Cal.

Wile couldn't think of anything else to say so he asked the President about mail delivery. It must be quite a job, he opined, to get the official mail up in that out-of-the-way place. Wile waited, hoping Coolidge might expand on that subject.

"But all the President said was: 'No. Regular government pouches.' Then Mrs. Coolidge put in: 'We have to send all our laundry back to Washington."

"Not in the pouches," said Coolidge. Period.

The next year Coolidge repaired to the Black Hills of South Dakota where he lived in a spacious lodge among the trout streams, guarded by a troop of cavalry and making a long, twice-weekly journey to Rapid City to attend to affairs of state and interview the press.

The next year he again went to Wisconsin and on an island in a lake 28 miles southeast of Superior, lived in Cedar Lodge, making necessary a 56-mile trip three times a week.

President Hoover, when he took office, almost immediately went down into his own well-lined journal for $15,000 bought "Rapidan," another mountain stronghold in the Blue Ridges. When he left office he promptly deeded the tract to the commonwealth of Virginia, hoping, perhaps, other presidential camp fires would burn there. But his successor chose otherwise.

Warm Springs belongs to the state of Georgia, countless thousands will visit it, as they do Hyde Park and other local monuments. "Shangri-la" is now a part of the national park system.

The next president, whoever he may be, may have it if he wishes, without extra expense to the taxpayer. But who knows? He may have a dream-house, realization of which we need hardly begrudge him.

The Leavenworth reunion was held at the summer home of Jay Leavenworth located on a lake north of Brighton.

Mr. and Mrs. Bill Hanson have returned home after spending a few days up North.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hines went to Williamston Monday for Mrs. Hines' sister, who is visiting here from the West.

RED CROSS NOTES

Mrs. T. W. Eastle, chairman of home service of the Oakland County Chapter American Red Cross, wishes to remind all veterans of World War I that national life insurance, which has lapsed, can be reinstated before August 1. All veterans are urged to take action before the deadline. Forms for this purpose are available at the Home Service Office, 410 Pontiac State Bldg., Pontiac. Insurance policies may be reinstated by the payment of two months premium and a statement of present health.

The local chapter will again carry on its inquiry service to and from foreign countries which was discontinued at the close of the war. In re-establishing the service, however, the American Red Cross wishes to state that results cannot be guaranteed because of the great dislocation of persons in all foreign countries. Much has already been done by refugee agencies and the Red Cross is now anxious to assist all individuals who have not been able to locate friends and relatives. This service will again be directed within the local chapter by a corps of volunteers.

A total of $19 individuals approached the chapter for varying types of assistance during the past
