DIGEST
The world, engaged in occupation duties, in the circumstances, the size and degree of readiness of the reserve components, become matters of the most vital concern. For if these reserve components are not adequate, the overall military strength of the United States is a hollow shell.
6. The reserve components are far below their authorized strengths and are without hope of filling their quotas by voluntary means alone.
These authorized strengths represent the barest minimum estimate of manpower requirements.
7. The authorized strength of approximately 18 per cent of the authorized strength, the organized units of the organized reserve corps at 14 per cent, and the unassigned reserve pool at 35 per cent (summer of 1947). The 1,200,000 members of the unassigned reserve pool are merely names on paper, untrained and unorganized.
8. UMT would build up the reserve components to their authorized strengths, and would achieve a stability and an increased efficiency of our ready forces that do not now obtain. This alternative would be a regular army of about 4,500,000.
9. Consideration was given the claim that future warfare would be of the pushbutton variety requiring "only a handful of scientists." This claim is a dangerous illusion. If there is another war, it will be more "total" than the last, and will involve a greater number of human beings without any hope of distinguishing the combatant from the noncombatant. The war in all probability will come into the cities and the homes of the people of the United States. In such event, the survival or recovery of the nation might well depend on the presence of well-disciplined and able-bodied men in every community.
The foregoing, then, were some of the reasons which guided the armed services committee of the house to vote out a national security training act. The act would set up four agencies.
NATIONAL SECURITY TRAIN-ING CORPS, consisting of all young men to be trained. Although these young men, legally, would have military status, they would not be members of the armed forces, but would be subject to no duty other than training and would become members of the military establishment only in a national emergency.

set the policies, standards of substance and character of the training program. The commission would consist of three paid members appointed by the President—two members, including the chair-from the armed forces.

GENERAL ADVISORY BOARD, which would provide the commission with the best technical advice on all phases of the program. The board of 10 to 15 members would be composed largely of civilians, serving part time (with pay), but would include at least three members of the armed forces. It would have no policy-making authority.
SELECTIVE TRAINING SYS-TEM, similar to the selective service system of World War II, which would register, examine, classify, assign, defer, deliver and maintain records of men registered under UMT.

As you note, although military training (in the modern sense which involves not only physical training but also mental training, in the basis of the national security corps, it is devoid of many factors which have made universal service in the past traditionally objectionable to the American people.

In these days, any military training insofar as it involves killing is objectionable to the balanced personality. But, since we have not eliminated the predatory forces in the world, have not even eliminated them, certain measures of self-protection like UMT are necessary.
What are the features of military training which stick in the eyes of the average free American?

Probably the first (the thing that used to overwhelm me at certain moments in my early months in the army) is the lack of freedom. No longer was I a free man whose liberty could be curtailed only after a jury trial and the judgment of my peers. Suddenly, I was confronted by the Articles of War, the court martial system, and in some cases (although I personally never suffered much from it even in wartime) the petty tyranny of a superior in rank.

But the trainee under the proposed national security training act is not subject to the Articles of War at all during the first phase of his training and only conditionally during the additional six months of service, depending on which option he may elect. Under the bill there are three levels of disciplinary punishment:
(a) Commanding officer's punishment (company punishment) for minor violations with no restriction or confinement for more than one week, and with the privilege of asking for trial.
(b) National security training court, consisting of five officers appointed by the regimental commander or above, to try cases under the act. Punishment would not exceed three months of restriction, extra duty or confinement, but might include dishonorable discharge.
(c) U. S. district courts and other civil authorities for "serious crimes," specified misdemeanors and unlawful acts.

PLEA FOR A SAFE CHRISTMAS MADE BY RED CROSS

You want this Christmas to be a Merry Christmas. Yes, of course, you do! But did you know that more people are killed in December than any other month, and that carelessness, especially at Christmas time, is the cause of almost every fatality? The Oakland County Chapter issues the following warnings from the American National Red Cross Accident Prevention Service:

Forest fires can be staged right in your living room if you use Christmas tree lights and extension cords which do not carry the Underwriters Laboratory label.
And inflammable decorations will brighten the blaze!

Select a cool spot for your Christmas tree — not only because it will keep fresher but as a fire prevention measure. Placed near a radiator, fireplace or any heating unit, the tree dries out and becomes a fire hazard. Keep cigarettes and matches far from your tree.

To be sure that your lighted candles add a festive touch to Christmas and not a conflagration — keep curtains, paper decorations, dried pine or holly at a safe distance.

A rolling toy gathers no moss, but it collects victims quickly if left to its own devices on stair steps and waxed floors.
And, when you're out shopping on the busy streets, remember that if you want to be around to enjoy Christmas, cross streets carefully at cross walks with the light.
Automobile brakes are not very effective on slippery pavements. And most important of all, if YOU are the DRIVER, DRIVE CAREFUL!

REMEMBER — a safe holiday is the happiest one.
