WASHINGTON DIGEST . . .

he achieved campus success; because what was considered a "prominent student."

He grew to realize the emptiness of "college honors" but, unlike Vincent Sheehan, who was to follow him, Roy learned to admire the university which he had "collegially" exploited. At our 20th reunion, he interpreted the word "university" in its obsolete but new meaning: "the whole . . . all things . . . the universe . . . a body of persons . . . the body of the people."

I shared those campus years with Roy, but I missed most of their significance and experience, for I was carefully sheltered (after a few freshman heartbreaks) behind the protective coloring of Greek letters. But I managed to know Roy and learn a little from his experiences. He is a man who inspires high loyalties.

There was a college period when we lost each other. He was commercial-arting and living in the University of Chicago settlement, where he taught art to little toughs from the stockyard district, developed a social conscience, became a national guard cavalryman (because he dreamed of "going west" and being another Frederick Remington), not his first peep into the world of culture and fell in love with a charming and "modern" mentor out of a world until then strange to him.

One day shortly after World War I broke out, I received a long distance telephone call. It was Roy, he was going overseas. Wouldn't I join him? I had just completed a tour of European wandering much more conventional than Roy's was to be. I also had a job. So I, the congenial bourgeois, rejected the idea.

Later I learned that he then had two incentives I lacked: A

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear father and grandfather, William R. Turner, who passed away January 15, 1941.

In our hearts your memory lingers. Sweet and tender, kind and true, there is not a day goes over that we do not think of you. Sadly missed by his loving children and grandchildren.

The Turner family.

Mr. Elsie Bradley suffered a heart attack Wednesday, January 7 at the Methodist Church while he was preparing for the Exchange Club meeting. At last report, Bradley was improving. Two of his granddaughters, Mrs. John Krosnik of Cleveland and Mrs. Ben Campbell of Detroit, were visiting him.

STEEL EXECUTIVES MEET WITH HARRIMAN

WASHINGTON, D. C. — SOUNDPHOTO — Top steel company executives met with Commerce Secretary Harriman to discuss starting steel priorities and to study industrialist Henry J. Kaiser's proposal that the steel industry create an impartial steel anti-inflation commission to protect small and new manufacturers from being "starved" to death for lack of steel and to prevent gray market speculations. Left to right, Benjamin F. Fairless, president of U. S. Steel Corp., New York City; Secretary of Commerce W. Averell Harriman; John C. Virden, Special assistant to Harriman, serving as director of the Office of Industry Cooperation and Undersecretary of Commerce William C. Foster.

broken heart and a sketchbook, as spurs. Unbelievably, without credentials, he wormed his way through beleaguered Belgium to the German front, where he learned to hate war. He came back to fight out a career in New York.

I'm not going to write any more of Roy's story for that is his story told far better than I could hope to recount it. I can only say that when World War I came to America he had his part in it, a fraction of which was again lucky enough to share with him. He was a cartoonist on the Stars and Stripes after the Armistice. Walking down Rue de la Paix one day with Roy I was mumbling reminiscences of riding beside my batteries of 155s. Suddenly he grabbed me by the arm. "Buck," he said, "that's poetry. Let's write a book. I'll illustrate it."

Of course, it wasn't poetry but it was verse the G.I.'s of our day understood and the illustrations were art. If art is life — and death — as Roy had seen it.

We came back and went our separate ways. He now had a partner, Caroline Singer, a perfect complement. She was a California newspaper woman. They built a home, leaving it periodically to travel the Seven Seas — China, Japan, Europe, Africa, India, Africa, crisscrossing out their books in perfect collaboration.

But Roy's book is his own story, a perfect American saga. As American as the wind that blows the Midwest corn fields; as foreign as the sounds and smells of Peking, Yokohama, the click of sabots in a tiny French village, varied as its ribbon-breasted diplomats, kings, Sengambian belles and Teheran beauties.

But it's more than that. It's the story of the making of a human philosophy old as the Mongolian mountains which are a part of its background, new as today.

"Left and right," writes Baldridge, "are not two evils, they are the same evil; and safety without the solidarity of class-conscious groups, screaming slogans, or party orders to lean upon, liberals must be staunch enough to walk a lonely road."

I know that Roy would like to have me conclude this review — if you want to call it that — with the following quotation which gave him his title, the biblical quotation: "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet speed to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favor to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all." I would not dare to doubt the words of the Preacher (Ecclesiastes IX:11) — but I know that here was a man who grasped time by the forelock, was able

There was a man in our town

And he was wondrous wise

He saved his coal and saved his gas

And did economize.

AND WE URGE YOU TO ECONOMIZE THIS WINTER

We dislike finding ourselves giving you advice instead of gas. Perhaps we can explain.

Your gas company was a wartime casualty, too. The demand for gas, both from domestic and commercial users, rose to an all-time high. More people came to agree with what we've been preaching right along — that gas is safe and one of the most economical of all fuels.

Naturally, that made us pretty happy. But when it came to obtaining steel for pipe-lines, mains and other plant equipment producing and delivering gas, we were up against it. We learned that for the time being there simply wasn't enough steel to go around.

Until we have all we need, we regret having to curtail new sales of gas for house heating.

"Landsakes, It's Past Seven!"

GRANDMA RILEY wasn't fooling either. "Past seven" was bedtime when Grandma was a girl. She was tired and tomorrow would be another hard day. She'd be up at 5:30 and busy every minute. Bread had to be baked and the wood stove had started smoking again. Then there were kerosene lamps to be filled—wicks trimmed and chimneys polished. And the oblong copper tubs had to be filled with clothes and steaming soap . . . then hand-scrubbed and put through the woodenringer. Beating and sunning the rugs was another job that just had to be done. It had been put off too long already.

Today Grandma is living the life of Riley. She has electricity!
