CONSUMERS POWER
ASKS PERMISSION TO REVISE RATES

Consumers Power Company today asked the Michigan Public Service Commission for permission to revise and standardize its natural gas rates in ways that would provide additional revenues for the company.

The company, in its petition, pointed out that gas users in the so-called "all-Michigan" gas area, which includes the cities of Alcona, Bay City, Charlotte, Hastings, Howell, Ionia, Ithaca, Lansing, Mason, Midland and Saginaw and other nearby communities, are paying substantially lower rates than those in the so-called "Texas" area, which includes the cities of Birmingham, Ferndale, Flint, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Marshall, Mt. Clemens, Owosso, Plymouth, Pontiac, Royal Oak and St. Johns, and surrounding communities. For some years all natural gas for the "all-Michigan" gas area came from Michigan fields. Now that natural gas for both areas comes from a common source, supplied almost entirely from distant Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas gas fields, it is only fair, the company says, that all communities served should pay the same rates.

Standardization of rates throughout the Consumers system, a company spokesman said, might mean a substantial increase in the rates paid by large industrial customers and space-heating (including home heating) customers in the "all-Michigan" gas area and a more moderate increase in the rates paid by domestic customers in this area who use gas for such purposes as cooking and water heating.

The company indicated, also, that even in the "Texas" area the rate for space heating is unreasonably low.

"Space heating by the use of natural gas," the spokesman says, "is in direct competition with other fuels, including fuel oil, bituminous and anthracite coals, and coke. Prevailing retail prices of these competing fuels have greatly increased during recent years, so that, viewed exclusively from the price standpoint, and without regards to the added value of relative convenience, cleanliness and absence of storage space arising from use of gas as a heating fuel, natural gas is now actually cheaper than the other types of heating fuel, being, by way of illustration, from 40 to 50 per cent less than fuel oil."

Fuels which compete with natural gas for commercial and industrial business, such as fuel oil and liquefied petroleum gases, also are selling at higher comparative prices than natural gas, according to the petition.

Consumers now has to pay a higher average price for natural gas, the petition recites, and other costs of supplying natural gas service also are up.
