Vacation Highlights
by
The Old AAA Traveler

Combine Spring and Summer sunshine . . . The Open Road . . . healthy appetites . . . and somewhere in the group will suddenly develop a cook . . . and what cooking out under the blue skies! Hundreds of thousands of vacationists now travel with stoves in their cars, while others depend on the country's myriad parks and camping areas.

Man through the ages has thrilled to the call of the cooking fire. First, of course, as a pathway to edible and more nutritious eating, but in more recent years, he has turned to outdoor cookery as a glorious pastime, an enthralling hobby. The result? Man has become more and more an able cook—a great cook in many cases—because man experiments in his cookery, uses a bit of this and that—and comes up with brand new and utterly delightful dishes.

It matters little where man does his cooking, there's a thrill to it, but certainly his greatest thrill comes in outdoor cooking, whether it be on an open fire deep in the woods or along a favorite trout stream, on a stove in a roadside park, on the portable grill he carries in the car, or on one of the magnificently ornate portable grills designed for the backyard.

Manufacturers of both cooking apparatus and foodstuffs have heeded man's wishes, with the result that today's outdoor cooking has become materially simplified, and certainly more enjoyable than in bygone days of crude methods. Today the outdoor chef has a wide field from which to select his grills and utensils, just as he has a spreading field from which to pick his foodstuffs, for these days new methods on frozen and dehydrated foods provides conveniences not dreamed of in years ago.

Because this year is deemed primarily at Michigan outdoor cookery . . . and most of their cookery will be in "wild country," it is well planned here only two fish dishes, but, believe me, you'll find 'em delicious. And bear in mind that they'll work equally well on a backyard grill or on the kitchen range . . . If the Little Women permits you to invade her nantucket. Listen:

3 tablespoons butter
2 cups of cornmeal
1 small onion
3 tablespoons drippings
Water or milk.

Roll perch fillets in a coating of the flour and equal portion of cornmeal, a bit of salt and pepper and the paprika. Fry the fillets in a combination of the butter and drippings. Lift out the browned fish and keep in a covered container near the fire to keep it hot.

There are a dozen recipes for hush-puppies, but the old Georgia recipe calls for the cornmeal and the cornmeal and flour left from rolling the fish, the baking powder, a liberal dash of salt and the onion, cut very fine, formed into a stiff batter with the water or milk. Then the batter is formed into little cakes one-half inch thick and fried in the drippings from the fish. These hush-puppies and fried perch will provide a meal long to be remembered. Sliced tomatoes provide the ideal salad, and there must be strong coffee.

3 cups of coffee
1 cup of water
1 cup of sugar
1 cup of milk

For each cup of coffee desired, place a level tablespoon of your favorite "drip-grind" coffee in the basket, with an additional full tablespoon "for the pot". Sprinkle over the dry coffee a bit of salt, or if you prefer, place atop the coffee a small square of chocolate. Many preference a piece of butter, half the size of a walnut. Have the water boiling briskly and pour the full amount of water in at one time. Keep the drip-processor where it remains hot, and when the water has dripped through the first time, pour several cups of the brew through again.

In this modern day a great number of cooks, even the indoor variety, prefer the "instant" coffee. This is found in a half-dozen brands, so it will be necessary, if you elect to use this type of coffee, to try several brands until you find just the one you personally desire.

But remember — good coffee, or your meat is spoiled.

1 1/2 pound fish fillets
1 medium onion
1/2 pound salt pork
2 Tablespoons flour
2 medium carrots
Salt and pepper
2 Tablespoons parsley, cut fine
3 medium potatoes
3 small tomatoes

Water
Cut salt pork into one-half inch cubes and fry until crisp and brown. Drain off fat of drippings. Cut fish into one inch squares, roll in flour and brown in drippings from bacon. Slice potatoes, onions and carrots over fish and add two cups cold water. Bring to boil. Cut tomatoes and parsley. Remove until potatoes and fish are done, adding more water from time to time, to continue cooking about forty minutes. If you desire more of a chowder than a stew, add milk just before cooking is completed. And if your taste leans in that direction, a bit of flour may be worked into cold water and the mixture used as thickener. It has become salad of sliced tomatoes, onions and cucumbers, salted and peppered and liberally doused with vinegar. Is ideal with this dish.
