Illegibility of the entries in my diaries isn't really as important as the numportance of their contents.

Let me illustrate from one with a worn teather cover which I have at hand. It is dated 1914, a good year for a diarry, but a bad diarry for the world. The record of war days should have been chronicled dramatically as the beginning of the end of an ejoch, an epoch which breathed its last in the midst of another war. But ild my record of another war. But ild my record which breathed its last in the midst of another war. But did my record do that? Let's look at June 29, 1914. Do we find the entry: "YESTER-DAY ARCHDUKE FERDINAND WAS ASSASSINATED AT SARA-JEVO?" We do not. We find this:

JEVO?" We do not. We find this:

In all justice, it may not be entirely the fault of my diary-making that I didn't record the assassing that I didn't record the Assassination of the archduke. Nobody sination of the archduke. Nobody in America took the tragedy very seriously. At that time few Am-ericans expected much-else from Europe's royal families but as-sassinations or less respectable peccadillos.

Later on, to be sure, there is evidence that I, on second thought, felt I hadn't done my diary justice insofar as Ferdinand was concerned. But I always was feeling that way about my diary and never doing anything about it.

This, as I said, keeps my diaries from having the slightest value other than to exude a somewhat conscious-stricken odor and remind me that the good young days were no better than those bad old ones insofar as my habits and conduct were concerned, for an honest linear and the summer of the concelling which we will editect to concell one's true character. You note in its pages some high resolve or noble undertaking which was more important to you at the moment of recording than the opening of the Panama Canal or the result of a presidential election.
