ments of the shell, all recovered except Groves, who died in a field hospital, and was buried nearby.

In 1922, 'Groves' body was sent home to Farmington for burial, and the service was attended by Farmington veterans, who were then in the process of organizing the Farmington Legion Post.

Lemuel Walker reported at Pontiac on September 20, 1917, and arrived in Camp Custer the next day. He was assigned to headquarters company of the 338th regiment, and later transferred to Camp MacArthur, arriving there on October 31.

He joined the machine gun company of the 125th Infantry, in the 32nd Division, arriving at Brest, France, on February 25, 1918.

Walker went into the big drive near Montfaucon on September 30, and was killed in action October 11, in an attack on Krimbilde, Stellung. He was a machine-gunner when killed.
