Ginger, Spice of Antiquity, Still Leads in Popularity

Chinese ginger, from which the first gingerbread men were made, is still popular in the United States from Hong Kong. Ginger is one of the "big five" that normally make up nine-tenths of the total volume of the 25 common spices, says National Geographic Society. Its use dates back to early Greek and Roman times. Made into shaps of men, animals or letters of the alphabet, gingerbread was delighting the children of England at Christmas time as early as the 15th century. Often the figures were glazed.

Henry VIII of England included ginger in a recipe sent the Lord Mayor of London as a remedy against the plagues then ravaging the city.

Ginger was imported into France and Germany perhaps as early as the 12th century. English travelers kept perforated containers of it so that customers could sprinkle ginger on their ale and porter. In the United States, the spice has been particularly popular in New England where, among other uses, ginger sauce sometimes is served on ice cream.

The ginger of commerce comes from the underground rootlike stem of the plant which grows to a height of one or three feet in the rich, well-watered soil of tropical countries. It yields 700 to 1,500 pounds of the dried spice to the acre in one year.

Crimpy Rayon Staple — Viscose rayon staple with a permanent kink or crimp, which makes fabrics feel crispier or bulkier, is the latest textile product placed on the market. It makes soft-up fabrics, such as blankets, warm without excess weight by keeping the fibers from matting. It also makes lighter, brighter fabrics, such as gabardines, feel lively and crisp. Fabrics woven from the crimped staple also resist raveling at the seams in laundering, making them more durable. Made of regular staple, it is claimed.

Government Hospitals — Ninety-seven per cent of the hospital beds in nervous and mental hospitals and 85 per cent of those in hospitals for tuberculosis are now under government control.
