Every Day Has Picnic Party-Time Potential

Let's go on a picnic! Doesn't the idea conjure up wonderful pictures of marvelous food enjoyed in pleasant company amidst scenic settings? If you're still going on the old-fashioned theory that picnics are for Sundays, you're missing out on a wealth of alfresco dining.

Every day has its picnic potential according to the picnic experts at the Thermos Division of King-Seeley Thermos Co. If anyone should know about picnics, they should. Who ever heard of a picnic without a Thermos vacuum bottle?

What's new under the picnic sun? Here are some ideas.

How about a romantic candlelight picnic a deux in the park before a concert or play? Carry your picnic in elegant style in an outing kit with two Thermos vacuum bottles, one to hold vichyssoise, the other minted iced tea.

Brunch on the beach is fun especially when you satisfy sharpened appetites with orange juice kept frosty cold in a vacuum bottle, fresh berries and cream, pancakes with maple syrup, and lots of hot coffee from a picnic jug. With a camp stove, you'll be able to cook up a batch of pancakes in no time at all much to the enjoyment of your picnickers. Tote perishables to the picnic in an ice chest. There'll be plenty of room for thirst-quenching soft drinks, too.

Fresh corn-on-the-cob fans have been known to have a pot-of-water-boiling before going out to pick corn—after donning their track shoes, of course. Maybe you think that's corny but if you have wistful memories of how good corn used to taste, treat your family to a tallgate picnic with corn-on-the-cob as the star of the menu.

Boil the water on a camp stove while you husk the corn and slice the tomatoes. Cold fried chicken, butter and assorted soft drinks will be chillily nestled in an ice chest. Dessert could be watermelon wedges or one of the popular frozen loaf cakes which can defrost en route.
