Spring Search Produces 55 Starved Deer

First extensive upper peninsula spring search for dead deer, in the Blaney area, produced 55 starved victims in the 484 acres scouted by conservation department field men and prison inmates. While only a regional sample in a known poor browse area, game warden say it could indicate severe late winter and early spring starvation losses in other upper peninsula areas. Blaney area cedar and balsam were browsed out years ago and whitebalsams have been subsisting on hardwood reproduction and tag alder. Other upper peninsula searches are now in progress.

DETROIT EDISON TO MAKE WELL REPAIR SAFER

The Detroit Edison Company stands ready to help take the danger out of well-repairs where overhead electric lines are a hazard in the raising and lowering of drop pipes and casings. Arrangements may be made with the company for protecting well-drilling equipment against contact with electrical conductors. Harold J. Hall, Edison's Bloomfield district manager, explains that well-work near electric lines is particularly dangerous because the men handling the equipment usually have a perfect "ground". "People tend to forget that unwieldy pipes and lines are to be treated as live wires," Hall notes. "Lives can be saved each year if the electrical hazard is eliminated from well-repair work." Detroit Edison now applies to all its customers, and the company will take care of the hazard whether the wires are on the customer's own property or are on a public right-of-way. All Detroit Edison farm service advisors are being asked to carry this information throughout rural areas.
