Fishing License Sales Increase

Unprecedented increases of 33 to 154 per cent in resident and non-resident fishing license sales, undoubtedly due largely to the earlier general season opening, is reported by the conservation department.

"We've never had comparable increases at the end of the first five months of any year before," says Arden L. McNeill, head of the department's license section, who hastens to add that latest license agent returns still are not complete.

Resident license sales reported total 331,449 or 33 per cent more than the 253,352 recorded through May last year. Non-residents have picked up 23,777 permits as contrasted to the 9,281 reported sold by agents in 1951.

Trout stamp purchases were up 20 per cent with 61,474 issued, 51,118 before. Retail minnow licenses total 925, or 12 per cent more, wholesale bait permits numbered 124, or 28 per cent higher. The early season general opening, April 26 rather than the customary June 25 of previous years, gave anglers about two months extra fishing time.

Mr. and Mrs. Kganeth Wilkinson and family of Wayne left Sunday for Martin's Ferry, West Virginia, where they will visit Mrs. Wilkinson's parents.

Grain Fields Can Be Improved By Using Weed Control Spray

Many small grain fields in Michigan can be improved, and in some cases actually saved, by spraying them with 2,4-D to control weeds.

Not all species of weeds are controlled by 2,4-D but wild mustards, wild radish, ragweed and lambquarter are not difficult to kill if the 2,4-D is applied at the right time and in the right amounts.

Small grains, including oats, barley and wheat, are more susceptible to injury from 2,4-D at some stages of growth than at others. Greatest injury comes when seedlings are only two or three inches high. They should not be sprayed at this stage.

When small grains are six to eight inches high they are rather tolerant to 2,4-D and young weeds are most susceptible, Churchill says. Later the weeds will be more tolerant and difficult to kill.

A maximum of one-quarter to one-half pound acid equivalent per acre should be used. The lower rate would be for the ester formulations of 2,4-D. Your county agricultural agent can explain 2,4-D formulations to you and advise the best type for your weed problem.

If a legume seeding is made with the grain crop, the problem becomes more complicated. The salts of 2,4-D rather than the ester formulations should be used at rates not to exceed one-quarter pound acid equivalent per acre if legume, alsike or ladino clover is the legume.

If the seeding is alfalfa, a dithio selective spray would be safer for the alfalfa than 2,4-D. Churchill recommends. Sweet clover seedlings usually will be injured considerably by either chemical. Spraying small grain fields containing a sweet clover seeding is not advised.

Small areas of quackgrass can be spot sprayed with the compound TGA and a knapsack sprayer. Such treatment, however, will kill the small grain crop.
