TAKE PRECAUTIONS AGAINST WINTER CANNING SPOILAGE

Don't risk the possibility of spoiled foods in your fruit cellar this winter. Take precautions now and be sure your work is worthwhile, urges Mrs. Josephine Lawyer, county home demonstration agent.

For instance, avoid mold on canned fruits and tomatoes. This mold, Mrs. Lawyer said, is a fuzzy, grayish or white growth on the surface that sometimes produces a musty odor. It may make the canned food slimy, too.

To prevent this mold, Roberta Hershey of the foods and nutrition department at Michigan State College recommends using a water bath for processing rather than open kettle method. Boiling food in an open kettle will destroy the mold, but more molds may be carried in with air as the lid is being adjusted. So, bear in mind that food should be heated after the lid is on, Mrs. Lawyer said. Another precautionary measure is to be sure the seal is good and that imperfect jar edges do not allow air to enter the can. It is best, always, to follow the directions of the manufacturer in handling lids.

Flat sour in tomatoes is a medicinal, sour or bitter flavor that does not change the appearance of the tomatoes. To prevent flat sour, Mrs. Hershey suggests using only fresh, clean, sound tomatoes. And be sure to apply the heat long enough. Ten minutes in boiling water bath if packed hot and if packed cold apply heat 25 minutes for pint jars and 45 minutes for quart jars. Another thing to remember is to cool the jars quickly after canning and then store them in a cool place, Mrs. Josephine Lawyer said.
