Bacon and Garden Vegetables Make a Meal

DOROTHY MADDOX

A DINNER of crisp bacon slices teamed with two or more garden vegetables has both appetite and eye appeal. What's more, it is a quick dinner to prepare.

When preparing your bacon, choose it from a refrigerated case. It's a practical idea to look for a brand of bacon which assures quality meat, cut from only the finest cured and smoked slices of pork. Plan to use the bacon within a week of purchase.

The bacon slices will separate more easily when stored in the package, loosely wrapped, on the lowest shelf of your refrigerator. Just before cooking, allow bacon to stand at room temperature for about five minutes before lifting off the slices. As in the case of all smoked products, bacon does not freeze well. It is best to buy bacon, if you need it and will use quickly.

To pan-fry bacon, start it, either in separate slices or slices "in a lump," in a cold skillet. As the skillet and bacon heat slowly, the drippings in the pan will during cooking to float slices and to keep them from burning. Pouring off drippings is both hazardous and unnecessary.

A combination of crisp ribbons of bacon and two favorite vegetables will make a full-size family meal. Try a bacon dressing poured over your vegetables. It's something to brag about.

When buying lemons, avoid the green-tinted fruit, as generally it is not fully "cured," advise Michigan State College home economists. On the other hand, lemons should be green rather than deep yellow-green lines contain more acid.
