Try Classroom Approach To Alcohol Problem

MSC Offers 10-Session Course This Year

A new approach to the alcohol problem will be attempted in Michigan this year—a classroom approach.

A ten-session, non-credit course in "Alcohol—Society's Problem" will be offered Monday evenings between September 28 and November 30 in the Michigan State Evening College at Michigan State College.

Cosponsors are the State Board of Alcoholism and Michigan State College's police administration department.

Factual material about the problem will be presented in the course with no attempt to influence anyone's opinions, according to the instructor, Ralph F. Turner, associate professor of police administration.

Such an experiment in educating the public about alcohol is a new idea in Michigan, Turner said. He added that the Board of Alcoholism may offer similar courses elsewhere in the state if the first is well received.

Motion pictures, panels and discussions will cover the history of the problem and the psychological, physiologically, therapeutic and rehabilitative aspects. Liquor controls at the national, state and local levels will be discussed as well as public attitudes and thinking.

The course, in which any adult may enroll, also will feature talks by visiting authorities on the problems of alcoholism.

Professor Turner has had extensive experience in the study of alcoholic intoxication in relation to police work.

Baptists Plan Movie For Sunday Evening

The Rev. Andrew Pratt of Gull Lake, Michigan, will be the guest of the First Baptist Church Sunday evening, September 20, as he shows his challenging film, "Contrary Minds" at the 7:30 Fellowship Hour.

In this presentation a conflict of emotions is skillfully portrayed upon the screen when two couples are caught in both an actual storm and a psychological one.

The Young People's Choir of the church will furnish special music, and the song service will be led by Mr. Sheldon Knowles.

MORE ROOM

Facilities for emergency mass feeding and housing in the Milford area have recently been expanded to permit the handling of 2,000 persons.

Of this total, 1,000 would be cared for in Milford and 2,000 at nearby points. Credit for this increased capacity goes to the General Motors, which has agreed to allow the use of its proving ground away auditorium, a huge show room which will accommodate 1,500 people.

Economist Cites Farm Solvency

The next step on many Michigan farms is not expansion. It's holding past gains and keeping financially solvent.

That's the way a Michigan State College agricultural economist, E. B. Hill, puts it. He says farmers in general should be giving "real consideration" to that problem. He passes along these suggestions for consideration:

Reserves for emergencies should be available. All assets should not be pledged as collateral and it's best not to borrow up to the credit limit.

Study present debt obligations including those to merchants and other individuals. Have debts in a safe position and in the hands of lenders who will be able to extend payment dates if the going gets tough.

Improve the income producing capacity of your farm wherever possible. This means better farm management and close attention to details. Analyze farm records at the end of the year to see where improvements may be possible. Keep expenditures in line with income.
