Put Early Fall Vegetables on Daily Menu

BY DOROTHY MADDOX

VITAMIN-PACKED, appetite-tempting, fresh early fall vegetables are in the market now. Enjoy them! Serve them daily in your family menus—but be sure to cook them right in order to get every cent's worth of value.

Fresh Cauliflower With Buttered Crumbs

Fresh cauliflower should be creamy white with tightly packed flowers. To cook, trim off outer leaves, leaving the tender inside leaves attached to the head.

Invert the head in a pan of salt water and let stand 5 to 10 minutes. Drain. Place, head down, in boiling salted water. Cook, uncovered, about 10 minutes.

Turn head right-side-up and continue cooking until stem and tender, 10 to 15 minutes longer. Drain and serve immediately, topped with buttered crumbs, which can be made by melting 3 tablespoons butter, adding ½ cup fine dry bread crumbs, then stirring over low heat until lightly browned.

Fresh Broccoli

When buying fresh broccoli, look for stalks that are firm and green. The heads should have tight buds and be a rich green or slightly purplish green color.

Broccoli should be washed thoroughly under running water or by plunging the heads up and down in cold water. Trim off the tough stalk ends and drop into rapidly boiling salted water. Cook just until stalks are fork tender, but still firm—12 to 15 minutes. Some people like to stand the stalks, blossom end up, in the water and cook about 8 to 10 minutes.

Lay the blossoms down in the water and continue cooking until tender. This is because the stalks take longer to cook than the blossoms. Serve with butter.

Fresh Carrots

When buying fresh carrots remember that the deeper the orange color, the more vitamin A they contain. Select carrots that are firm, crisp-textured and smooth-skinned.

into rapidly boiling salted water. Cook lightly covered, just until tender. This will be 15 to 20 minutes for young ones and 20 to 30 minutes for older carrots.

Slip off skins under running water if desired. Serve topped with melted butter and a good sprinkle of minced fresh parsley. For sliced carrots, wash and scrape them thinly. Slice and drop into small amount of rapidly boiling salted water and cook, covered, just until tender—6 to 10 minutes.

Drain and serve with melted butter or add a little light cream and toss gently just to coat each slice. Save the water the carrots were cooked in and use it in gravies, sauces or soups.
