THE MICHIGAN MIRROR

By GENE ALLEMAN

government economy until the loss of job situation arises," the president continued. "Then economy seems to take on an 'evil aspect.'"

"We keenly resent this sinister trend." That's a quote from a Farm Bureau resolution which refers to politics in the state Department of Agriculture.

The Michigan State Grange makes itself equally clear on the same subject by charging that Governor Williams "violated the intent of the 1945 'bipartisan' statute by 'replacing members to the agricultural commission' whose terms of office have expired regardless of their ability, qualifications or periods of efficient service."

Both groups were talking about the controversial firing this summer of Charles Fleg, director of agriculture, and the subsequent replacing of commissioners who opposed the action.

The Grange also expressed fear that the state fair board will be subjected to even more pronounced political pressures. They hoped to avert by proposing that control of the fair be transferred from the board to the agricultural commission.

Most important and far-reaching Farm Bureau resolution, in the opinion of its spokesmen, is the stand it takes on research and education.

Terminating price supports and stabilization plans "temporary and economic pain killers at best," the resolution calls for study to find new uses for farm products and higher return from land under cultivation.

"Only through an accelerated program of research and education can the farmer receive a fair return for his investment and labor, and provide a dependable, adequate supply of food and fiber for the consumer," says Clark L. Hrydy, vice president of the Bureau.

"High price supports are hard on the integrity of a nation," he said. "It presents a difficult ethical problem to farmers when they are paid money for crops that they know are not put to efficient use."

Is forthcoming from both groups. This matter is expected to be considered in the next session of the legislature under a bill proposed by Rep. Rollo G. Conlin, (R, Leelanau). Under the present system there is a two year lag between the time sales tax money is collected and the time it is returned to local branches of government.

Township government, now under attack as unfair and inefficient, also gets the backing of both groups. "We believe in home rule, but we also realize that we must be willing to do our part to make good government a reality in our local communities," reads a Farm Bureau resolution.

Other subjects advocated by the Grange include: no limits on earnings of people drawing social security benefits; hospital privileges for osteopathic physicians; uniform inter and intra state traffic laws.

Grange resolutions opposed: voting rights for 18 year olds; life-time front and rear license plates; additional fortification of milk, which would be a move "to turn it into a patent medicine."

There was approval from the Farm Bureau for improved state grading: uniform Sunday hunting regulations on a regional basis; promotion of the "Ask the Farmer First" campaign for hunters.

Bureau resolutions were against: changes in the state sales tax diversion plan; taxation on a state equalization plan; compulsory social security for farmers; a federal sales tax.

These policies were expressed only after serious thinking and discussion. The responsibility for them was keenly felt. This is best demonstrated by a few lines in the foreword of the Farm Bureau list of resolutions. They read: "We cannot, as the spokesmen for nearly 60,000 Michigan farm families, afford the luxury of unsound decisions. The prestige and strength of the Farm Bureau requires that our policies be a part of the solution — not part of the problem."

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hazen of Sunnyvale were visited by their daughter, Elvora, who came home for the Thanksgiving holiday from school in Indiana.

Charles Hazen is convalescing from an appendectomy performed the Wednesday before Thanksgiving at Detroit Osteopathic Hospital.
