CREOSOTE NOT CAUSE OF X-DISEASE

Creosoted posts, once thought to cause X-disease in cattle, have been cleared of any blame.

Dr. Frank Thorp, research pathologist at Michigan State College's agricultural experiment station, reveals that studies show no connection between the disease and American creosote.

He explains that the misunderstanding came about when cattle were in contact with creosote at the same time they had access to high-pressure greases.

These high-pressure greases that cattle lick off machinery and tractors contained chlorinated naphthalenes - one of the real causes of X-disease.
