The fight against polio is now being extended to patient aid, scientific research and professional education - officials of the National Polio Foundation stated. Your Child And Reading Inability To Pronounce Words Often Due To Faulty Training Process

Parents make the complaint every day that their young child can't read. What they really mean is that their child has difficulty making some of the sounds of our language, and that consequently some of the words in which these sounds appear are unintelligible. Dr. Charles Pedrey of the Speech and Hearing Clinic at Michigan State University, says: "Speech is defective whenever the listener pays more attention to how the speaker speaks than to what the speaker is saying. If, for instance, the speaker is putting in a 'w' sound in place of the 'm' sound and says 'wabbitts can wun wavy wapidly,' he is defective in his speech because it is difficult for some people to understand what he is saying. Or he may make a 'th' sound for the 's' sound and say 'Thauby liketh to play in my thand book.' (See also 's' sound and 'sh' sound.)"

Speech correctionists call this kind of speech a defect of articulation. There are, of course, other kinds of speech defects. Everyone can identify stuttering. Many people recognize cleft palate speech, the speech of the hard-of-hearing, the speech of the child with cerebral palsy. These are the common kinds of defective speech found in children.

We know about many of the reasons why a child may develop faulty articulation. We know what causes cleft palate speech, hard-of-hearing speech, and cerebral palsy speech. We don't know too much about what causes stuttering.

Speech is something we learn, and all things being equal, most children can be taught acceptable speech if the child can be given proper instruction. The chief cause of poor articulation is probably faulty learning. If the cause is faulty learning, it means that the child's speech is not normal if he is properly taught by a person who understands the problems and the techniques. It will take time and patience, but it can be done. It is possible that the child is incapable of learning, or that his speech mechanism will not work as it should. If poor speech is caused by either of these two reasons, the case may be hopeless. Fortunately, the vast majority of children can be helped because the cause for their poor speech is improper learning.

The first place that the parent can turn for help is the public schools. If the schools employ a trained speech therapist, the parent can get expert advice and help for the child. If there is no such person in the town the parent should contact the nearest university speech clinic. All of our universities, colleges and universities maintain such clinics and the services of the clinic are available to residents of the state.

A word of advice to parents. The sooner you can get help for your child's speech the better it is for the child. That doesn't mean that you're to worry if your one-year-old doesn't say "mama." Even if your child is four or five years of age and doesn't talk plainly, the speech therapist may advise you to wait a year or so before giving him speech therapy because your child may have matured enough yet. But even if you're advised to wait you'll know that you have done your bit and that the child does not correct his own speech you will know where you can get help.

Fortunately United States coal reserves are vast. We have nearly 40% of the world's total, and at the present rate of use, that's good for another 2,000 years. Even if we use twice as much coal per year in the years ahead either as solid fuel or transformed into gas and oil, we will have enough to last for hundreds of years.

Street gablesmen in ancient Greece were required by law to stand until their goods were sold. The result was a drop in prices at the end of the day when their legs became weary.

Only nine times in the last 50 years has Pennsylvania production of bituminous coal been less than 109,000,000 tons. Its first hundred million-ton year was 1902.

Besides performing at various community youth functions, Klus has appeared on numerous occasions for large programs outside the community and on radio and TV programs. CRANBROOK TO MAKE REVISIONS AT ACADEMY IN '55

The museum of Cranbrook Academy of Art will begin the year with a different title, a revised policy and a new head, the trustees of the Academy have announced.

William Mitchell, registrar of the Academy and for 17 years a member of its faculty, will be Head of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, Galleries, January 1, when the resignation of Miss Eva I. Galling, present museum curator, becomes effective. He will continue as registrar, but will relinquish his duties as an instructor.

Under the new policy the Galleries will continue to show selections from the great art-producing civilizations of the New and Old Worlds, but will place more stress, than formerly on current activities in the fields of decorative and practical art, as well as sculpture and painting.

Mitchell, who has won numerous awards in state exhibitions and has held one-man shows of his paintings in New York and various Midwest art centers, first came to Cranbrook Academy of Art as a student in 1934 after receiving his A. B. degree from Northwestern University.

He earned his master's degree from Columbia University in 1938, before the Academy became a degree-granting institution. He spent a year as an instructor in art at Cranbrook School, a preparatory school for boys, before joining the Academy faculty.

Based in the Galleries' exhibitions are art objects collected during his long lifetime by the Michigan newspaper publisher, George G. Booth, donor of the six Cranbrook art institutions. The Galleries are open free to the public from 2 to 5 p.m. daily excepting Mondays and major holidays.
