PLAN CHANGES CAN BE GOOD, DOCTOR SAYS, DON'T FRET

So you've changed your mind; this morning you find your work plans for the day are completely different from those you outlined in your mind last night.

This change of plans is not one to feel guilty about, points out Dr. Irma Gross, head of the home management department at Michigan State College. Rather, the homemaker who can alter her plans "midstream" should realize that it is a sign of strength, not weakness.

Dr. Gross points out this example: "Typical Homemaker," who is expecting a house full of week end guests, has set aside a certain amount of time to get the house ship-shape. In the middle of her work, she finds she is getting tired. Rather than continue with her cleaning, she takes time out to rest and save her energy, so she will be more at ease with her guests and a better hostess.

In the managing of their homes, homemakers go through three steps: First, they make their plan; this may be mental or actually put down on paper. Second, they control the carrying out of the plan. Third, they look back and evaluate their plan to see how it can be done better.

In this second step, Dr. Gross advises that a change of plan is not only acceptable but very desirable. She feels that while carrying out your plan, if you think of a better way of doing it or realize that something else should be taking your time, you shouldn't be too hesitant to change your mind.

Hunting, Fishing License Sales About Same For '54

Michigan probably sold as many or more hunting and fishing licenses in 1954 as were sold in 1953.

Though too early to predict total sales accurately, the present trend indicates that sales in all major license divisions except deer increased somewhat during the year. Deer license sales probably slumped about 30,000 from 1953.
