From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Finally Talked Herself Out

A certain talkative young lady always spent a night locked in "Doc" White's drugstore.

She entered Doc's store about 1 P.M., going directly to the pay phone. At eleven-thirty Doc went home--not having seen a customer for a half hour. Around midnight he got a call from the store ... she had finally run out of conversation (and money) and found the front door locked tight.

Doc vowed he'd leave her there to teach her a lesson. But Mrs. V. spoke up: "Now you go turn her loose. It's hard to cut a good conversation short -- something only a woman understands!"

From where I sit, however, plenty of men are as hard to pry away from a telephone as any female. Some people are just naturally long-winded, while others are the silent type--just as some of us like coffee and others prefer a glass of beer. The important thing is to be considerate ... before friends start giving us the "busy signal."

Speak Highly Of Training Project In Mexico Supported By UNESCO

Dear Sirs:

After the splendid publicity which you gave to the UNESCO Fund Raising Project in February, I thought you may be interested in a first hand report on the projects which Michigan is undertaking to help support. This project is aimed at raising the cultural and economic standards of underprivileged people. The Center is partly supported by the Mexican Government as a National Project and helped by UNESCO and the United States.

During a tour of Mexico, my husband and I called at the Praefecture office of Crefal (Centro Regional de Educacion Fundamental Para La America Latina) and were interested by Dr. Alvarez, publicity director. The center is housed in the former home of President Cardenas, presented by him for the purpose. Adjacent dormitories and shops have been built for the students; These students are top flight educators from most of the Western Hemisphere countries who are studying in Mexico. The center is engaged in developing new and improved methods of reaching underdeveloped groups.

The plan of the project is to use the native crafts and skills and to teach the natives how to develop small industries on a cooperative basis. Each of the sixteen villages around the lake features a different skill. As the business develops the formal education becomes apparent and the natives accept it eagerly.

Each student at the center selects a skill in which to specialize; ceramics, engraving, etc. by the men; and home economics, nursing and health by the women. They learn how to make the best use of the materials at hand with simple tools. After six months training at the school, students go in groups of five to the villages to train develop as teachers and help organize industries. At the end of their eighteen months of training, students write a thesis describing their accomplishments as a Master's Degree. Following this they return to their own countries to start similar projects.

We visited the project at the little Tarascan village of Tzucuztan. Here, under the direction of Dr. Salomon, a group of men and boys were engaged in building furniture from native pine cones. Another group in weaving heavy duck cloth and still another in making pottery from local clay. The women were working in their cooperative, making embroidered articles and linen weaving.

According to Dr. Salomon, the business part of this project is handled by the Indians themselves. He acts only in an advisory capacity.

After seeing this project it was our feeling that the money expended by UNESCO was well spent and should bring big returns throughout the Americas in developing healthier and more independent people.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Edna T. Cope
