NAME WALT DISNEY TO HEAD NATIONAL WILDLIFE WEEK. Walt Disney, creator of the popular "true life adventure" movies and many other famous films and television productions, will head up the 1955 National Wildlife Week to be observed March 18-24. Disney's acceptance of the honorary chairmanship announced recently by Ernest Swift, executive director of the National Wildlife Federation together with its state affiliates and local chapters, has attracted the attention of other conservation organizations and agencies, has sponsored National Wildlife Week since 1938 when the first such week was proclaimed by President Roosevelt.

The 1955 Wildlife Week theme will be "Save Endangered Wildlife." Swift said. A nationwide educational campaign under the aegis of these animals that face extinction over vast portions of their natural range. Among these are the rare whooping crane, the species declared by the U.S. individuals now wintering on the Arkansas National Wildlife Refuge in Texas, and the ivory-billed woodpecker, many of whose nests have already been looted.

Other species to receive attention will include the grizzly bear, Everglade kite, Eskimo curlew, Attwater's prairie chicken, lake sturgeon, bighorn sheep, scoter, Key deer, California condor, Montana greyling, trumpeter swan, and the lake trout of the Great Lakes.

Many kinds of wildlife have disappeared from some states but are still holding on in others," Swift said. "The wild turkey and greater prairie chicken, for example, have been eliminated from vast areas of their original range although they still exist in reassuring numbers in some states. The 1956 campaign will be designed to make the general public aware of some of our past mistakes in managing natural resources. It will publicize the steps that can still be taken to preserve those animals that are on the verge of oblivion."

As in past years, State and local chapters and committees will be named to coordinate the observance at local levels. Background information and special materials for radio, television and the press are being prepared and will be distributed through the state chairman.

The 1955 Wildlife Week theme was "Save America's Wetlands," stressing the wildlife and other natural values of this country's dwindling marshes and swamps. In 1954 the theme was water pollution control.
