Leading Detroit teachers will give demonstrations of simple decorating techniques.

The show will be open from 11 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. on Saturday and from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sunday and demonstrations will be going on continuously.

The United Fund idea came out of a meeting. Essentially, it meant that one charity drive should collect funds for many worthy agencies.

Previously the public was asked to contribute to numerous drives. No matter how worthy the causes, people found the steady diet of campaigns tiresome. Employees began to realize that sizable amounts of time were consumed in these campaigns. Production often stopped while employees heard salesmen's pleas. Other employees required so much time to conduct campaigns that it amounted to a problem.

A better way of collecting money was urgently needed.

The United Fund solved the problem by practicing as well as theory. It reduced the multiplicity of drives and the cost of conducting a drive; it conserved manpower and increased efficiency of spending.

Of every dollar handled by United Fund, 94 cents is spent for charity. In earlier drives it cost from 11 cents to 30 cents of each dollar to cover campaign costs alone.

Industry and business are more willing to cooperate under the one drive plan and are more willing to make contributions since the tax status of the charity is established.

Charities associated with United Fund must agree not to conduct additional campaigns. They must submit their budget to a UF committee of local people for examination and approval.

There are 32 such agencies in Michigan's United Fund. Their combined needs, as decided by the budget committee, becomes a part of the "community" chest drive in each area.

Last year $2,850,000 was budgeted by the UF committee. Next April about 200 citizens from all parts of the state will gather to decide next year's needs.

In the meantime, money collected from donors in Michigan is sent so that each contribution can do the most good with each dollar he can give.
