How do you go about making a long-range plan for extriliving space in your basement?

Inving space in your assentents.

No matter how enthralled you might become with ideas from books or magazines, you should plan your basement to suit yourself and your family. That sounds obvious, perhaps, but you'd be surprised how many people go ahead and build a recreation room, for example, without stopping to think that some other sort of room would be more useful to them some other sort of room would be more useful to them.

You should start by joining down a list of the activities that you and your family would most want to carry on in your finished basement. Don't include a recreation room, for instance, if a poll of your family shows that you entertain seldom and could use the space to greater benefit by building a dark room for junior, a sewing room for mother or sister, jand perhaps as eparate little room where you could the fishing files and store your hunting and fishing gear.

Whatever you decide, make sure your decisions are bo on your own family's needs and habits—and not those of so theoretical family pictured in some magazine. Your next so is to incorporate these ideas into a master floor plan of y basement—a plan which I described in my last column.

It's fun to plan for the years ahead, and careful plan good insurance against finding you've wastet work aterials on any sort of room that is seldom, if ever, used.

- Lucky you??? Unfortunately, the young engaged man who is looking for a diamond "deal" sets himself tor a diamond ceal sets imised up as a target for every type of diamond manipulation. Stop—and ask yourself these questions: Why has my money suddenly become so much more valuable than that of other intelligent purchasers? Why have these th have these "once in a lifetime" deals" just happened to be waiting for "lucky me?"

The Value Of Your Diamond Depends Upon

Cutting

A generation ago, very few diamonds were cut according to scientific proportions. Our diamonds are chosen for proper proportions and accurate cutting. A well cut stone has a fire and brilliance far superior to its poorly cut cousin.

Color

Assuming that a diamond is well cut, color is of prime importance. A stone with a slight bluish body color is much more desirable than one with a yellowish body color.

Every diamond at Von Burg's has exceptional clarity although some stones will have microscopic inclusions so minute that they are revealed only to the expert eye.

Of course, she would like as large a diamond as will fit your budged! Young men are faced with the problem of choosing a flawless diamond of a particular size or a larger stone with microscopie inclusions. Since flawless diamond of a particular size or a larger stone with microscopie inclusions. Since flawless the clustons do not impair the beauty or destrability of the diamond. As a consequence, many young men are deciding to place more emphasis on fine color, fine cutting and carat weight, than on a microscopic imperfection. Any diamond presented for your consideration by Von Burg's is a stone of fine quality. At Yon Burg's you are told the rating of each diamond in Cutting, Color, Clarity and Carat Weight, thus making your decision easier.
