Numerous Chores Kept Teens Busy A Century Ago

Teenagers were as busy if not busier a hundred years ago as they are today.

Here's what 17-year-old Elizabeth Gurney wrote in her diary on December 7, 1837, when she was living with her folks and her sister Clara on a farm in Centerville, Michigan in St. Joseph County. The diary is in the possession of The University of Michigan Historical Collections.

"This morning five o'clock sent me out of bed and about building the fire. Studied nearly an hour before time to get breakfast on my piece that I am to recite at the next election class. Was paid for early rising, if not in studying, in viewing the clouds and their various changes from early in the morning until about noon.

"After breakfast, Ma put a fire in the kitchen stove and in a short time she and Clara were washing. They would not let me help. I concluded to do the next best thing which was to wash dishes (which usually falls to my lot at such times), and sweep the bedrooms, bathe the children, and partly sweep the chambers, which occupied my time till noon."

With pardonable pride she continues, "Had the washing all out on the line by half past eleven and dinner before twelve. By two we had the kitchen cleaned out, the bedrooms dusted, the butter churned and the oil washed. Were some tired when we got through."

She continues, "Rusted a while, then I went down to Mrs. Benson's to see about a berth pattern, took down their copy of Bellows's Magazine, some butter milk and a roll of Dutch cheese, came home around five. The post Office got some papers and a letter. Set up a stocking this afternoon and this evening composed music for more than an hour. I think that we had done a pretty good day's work."

However, the entry for the following day makes it clear that this was only half the story. "This morning," she confesses, "I was not up so early as yesterday as the bed acted as a center of gravitation."

The Farmington School Board has already granted use of a part of the Bond School playground for playing fields. League officials said, and builders doing work on homes in Kendallwood Subdivision have agreed to provide labor. The Telford Equipment Company will donate grading machinery and labor to grade the diamonds.

Four male league teams and six or more farm teams are planned. Sponsors already arranged for include: Russell's Steak House, Detroit; Gordon Williamson Real Estate Company; Al Karner, Wilton Dairy route 1; Jean's Hardware and Gas Station; and the Farmington Branch of the National Bank of Detroit. ## F.H.S. Indonesian Exchange Student Named First Place Winner In Legion Auxiliary Essay Contest

Winners of the annual essay contest sponsored by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars are Ann Norr, F.H.S.'s exchange student from Indonesia who captured first place; Sandra Monje, a junior, second; and Ben Riddings, a junior, third.

This year's title, picked by the Auxiliary, was "America's Crusade for Free Men."

All students in F.H.S. American history classes were required to submit an original composition to their instructors. With the help of the English Department, the best of those handed in were chosen and turned them over to the Auxiliary for judging.

The winning essay written by Ann Norr, a junior, is titled "How often do we hear people using the term 'human rights' in daily conversation without really understanding its true meaning? It was not an exaggeration when we used the word 'crusade' in the title of this paper because the development in history of human rights was not an easy one. We are not yet at the point where we ought to be, in spite of our progress in technology and knowledge. We are not yet at the point where we can achieve our ultimate goal when people cannot abolish greed and prejudice and develop two character traits, understanding and tolerance."

Speaking about human rights, we arrive at another question: How can we make this come true? Of course, we can possess rights; but as long as nobody wants to recognize them, they do not mean anything. What use is it, for example, to express the theory that we people are created equal, possess equal rights, as long as it is only expressed in words and not in action?

We find the meaning of the expression "human rights" in the basic principle of democracy, the ideology whereby men can attain their rights, because democracy guarantees men equality in the true meaning of the word. I already mentioned above that when we speak of human rights we have to deal with democracy and the principles of it. And it is in this connection that I should like to state that the United States and still do participate in developing, spreading and—in several cases—defending democracy. Since the United States uses democracy as the basis of her government, there is another task of obligation to carry out; spreading this idea among other peoples. It is the task of the United States to help other nations to attain their rights, because democracy is very correctly used.

There is still another chapter, another aspect of human rights, which the United States faced in the past and still faces, this segregation, which is a problem very closely related to fundamental human rights. It is a pity that until now the United States has not been able to find a perfect solution to this matter.

Internationally speaking, the United States is doing very good work. I refer especially to two important events at international level; important not only for the people of the United States but to a certain extent, to the whole world:

1. After World War I, President Woodrow Wilson took the initiative to bring nations together, where they could carry out the principles of democracy, which included human rights.

I should like to emphasize in this connection that only with the recognition of human rights in a nation can it become one worth existing in this century.

When nations do this, and they do, they are recognizing the rights of other nations, we then can say that we are very close to the goal of democracy in its most extended meaning.

The attempts of the United States with the League of Nations seemed to be a failure, but this was not a reason for America to stop. She has been a crusader since the goal had not yet been achieved, there would always be time to do, and the United States realized this. We see this with the United Nations Organization after World War II with seventy nations participating in this international body. We can say now that we already are very close to our goal.

When every nation can have a body where they can discuss every problem that might occur, we are already one step in the right direction. So, in a democracy human rights can grow very well in a peaceful atmosphere and the best situation to create this atmosphere is where every nation can have prosperity, so that everybody can have enough to live. It is in this phase of the development of democracy, do not forget the human rights in it, that the United States again plays an important role in the international world. This is possible because:

a. the United States government is based upon democracy, and this includes having self-respect and respect for the human rights of another.
