Seek Community Aid In Planning Redevelopment
Congressman William S. Broomfield (R-Royal Oak) recently issued a request for help from Oakland County communities in an effort to determine what is needed in future Federal community redevelopment programs.
Broomfield said he fears that the government would be practicing "false economy" if the program to rehabilitate the Nation's older communities isn't speeded up.
To aid in determining what steps should be taken next, Broomfield is sending questionnaires to all Oakland County cities, townships and villages asking about the extent of their planning for future growth.
Broomfield said he agreed with Administrator Albert M. Cole of the Housing and Home Finance Agency that many communities need "municipal bankruptcy" if they fail to develop adequate urban renewal programs. Cole told members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at a Washington convention that urban renewal is a "business necessity."
Part of the solution to a better Federal self-help program for communities is now in the works in Congressional committees.
"Under the proposed new law now being drafted by a Senate Subcommittee, business and industrial 'slums' could be cleared and sold back to private developers," said Broomfield. "Under the present law, only new homes or apartment houses can be built."
Another proposed action soon to come before Congress is an effort to increase urban renewal funds from a proposed $175,000,000 to $250,000,000 a year.
Broomfield called our cities "the backbone of our American society. It is up to us to see that they are kept healthy and prosperous."
If slums and low-grade housing are allowed to creep into our cities, they will tend to drop property values over large areas.
"Cities, like people, don't stand still," said Broomfield. "They either flourish and grow healthy, or else they grow sick and die."
Broomfield said it is the responsibility of every community and its residents to see that all possible steps are taken to prevent decay from becoming imbedded in our neighborhoods.

A double treat of rhubarb in sauce or pie with fresh frozen strawberries is a suggestion made by Mrs. Josephine Lawyer, Consumer Marketing Information Agent. If the rhubarb is young and tender, and most of it is leave the peeling on for bright, rosy color.

Plan Landscape For Easy Care
You'll enjoy your home landscaping effects more if you plan them for minimum care requirements.
Joseph T. Cox, extension specialist in landscape architecture at Michigan State University, advises home owners to curb their desires for a great variety of plants in their landscape design.
Too many types of plants complicate the care of the shrubbery and do not contribute to the overall effect of the landscape.
Other tips Cox offers in landscape planning are:
Study your family's way of living and plan your landscape to fit in with this pattern. Cox advises changing your landscape to fit this pattern—not change the living pattern to fit the landscaping. Types of materials used, for instance, will depend on the amount of use the area gets.
Select plant materials for their mature effect. Avoid substitutions for temporary effects.
Use ground cover plants where they can be controlled and where they will cover bare ground. Original planning with the use of ground covers will save you time and effort in later care.
