Trend To Traditional Furnishings Gaining Momentum, Say Authorities

A major trend in this year's home furnishings lines is evidenced in the impressive emergence of correlated or coordinated collections, say fashion experts.

This correlation applies not only to groupings of case goods and upholstered furniture but also in such fields as drapery fabrics and upholstery fabrics. All this puts the emphasis on the over-all scheme rather than the individual item.

Two general fashion trends have also emerged this year, or reappeared in sufficient strength to clinch their importance, according to authorities. One is the continuing trend toward traditional elegance and formality, represented in almost baroque designs, in fine materials and in elaborate detailing. Another is the big boost given to American Colonial and Country English styles which are represented across the board in home furnishings.

Early American selections are now enriched by a wealth of new conceptions of the styles. From primitive, rustic pieces to the graceful, curvilinear designs identified with Queen Anne, there is enough diversity to satisfy a variety of purposes and tastes.

The new designs are often highly decorative, emphasizing such details as carving, fluting, molding and peg joinings. The most significant design departures are the countrified or rural English groups.

Manufacturers are cooperating with the demand for correlated groupings by bringing out long lines of cases that can be used in more than one room, it was indicated. Foremost among these functional pieces are small bachelors' chests, high storage "tall boys," under-the-window-size cases, servers that can be wheeled from room to room, bunching tables and room dividers that combine storage and display space.

Highlighting the new dining offerings are sophisticated looking dihettes and informal dining groups. The new low round dining tables with their deep upholstered chairs are frankly meant to be a part of even a formal living room. For traditional dining rooms, the new dining cases stretch out to over seven-foot lengths to solve most storage problems.

To achieve surface interest on the new case groups, designers have often worked with woods alone, forming marquetry and cross-graining, banding and edging, matched surfaces and pie-cut patterns. Other materials used include cane, leather, marble, ebony, teak, brass and silvery metals. Walnut, in either dry or oiled natural finishes, predominates in the new offerings.

In upholstered pieces, spider-legged modern is giving way to more substantial, important looking pieces. This is often achieved by lower, heavier base treatments. The new height of chair backs and 100-inch length of some sofas also contribute to the more substantial look.

Style influences noted in case lines creep into new upholstered offerings. These include Venetian, Oriental, and the omnipresent Provincial. Modern uses today's favorite materials-walnut, cane, leather-in exposed frame designs, say the experts.

Many manufacturers are going all-out for lush, traditional tufting treatments, fringes, crescent shapes and the like. Covers are flat and shiny or—newer yet—flat with a non-shiny pattern or hand-woven wool look.

In modern, a new construction method permits sleeker styling and smoother tailoring for the basic molded shell shape. Wood chips are added to the plastic form so upholstery can easily be tacked to the body.

The overwhelming general trend in home furnishings is toward a vast variety of blues. Rich deep purples are also taking root and in several categories have been teamed with blues and greens.

DAVID J. DeMARCO

Local Sailor Now On Tour Aboard U.S.S. Columbus In Pacific Waters

"I've been away from home a long time and I'd like to renew acquaintances when our ship returns to the States," says David J. DeMarco, fireman, USN. "My sister is getting married in October and I plan to take several weeks leave during that period"

"Dave," son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph DeMarco, 21417 Collingham, Farmington, was interviewed shortly after his ship, the USS Columbus, left Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on a goodwill tour to Melbourne, Australia, where the American servicemen are scheduled to march in the Inter-Service Commemoration Parade in the celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the Battle of the Coral Sea.

"The foreign port I enjoyed the most during the last cruise was Peru because it had such beautiful scenery. I found the countryside very similar to Washington State. In fact, I thought the buildings and clothing were all similar to those in the States. The only major difference in customs was the rigidity in dating: a young woman never goes out without a chaperone. During this cruise I hope to pick up a set of china from Japan for my folks and a cashmere sweater for my sister in Hong Kong. Other ports we will visit on this cruise include Hawaii, the Fiji Islands, Australia, Manus in the Admiralty Islands and Guam."

Prior to entering the Navy, Dave attended Clarenceville High School where he participateed in football and track. He also belonged to the YMCA swimming team and the International Police Organization where he took rookie training.

Aboard ship, DeMarco is responsible for the upkeep and maintenance of the diesel engines. Prior to reporting to the Columbus for duty in July of 1955, he served at the Great Lakes Naval Training Center, Illinois.

During his spare time, the Michigan sailor is taking a correspondence course in law from the U.S. Armed Forces Institute (which works with high schools and college in assisting active duty servicemen obtain scholastic credits). At the expiration of his enlistment with the Navy he plans to attend the University of Michigan, where he will major in law.

"I believe that every man should serve at least one tour of duty with one of the armed forces in order to travel and understand how different people live," DeMarco stated.

Oppose Nutria In Midwest

The Midwestern Association of Game, Fish and Conservation Commissioners, meeting at Itasca Lake, Minnesota, recently, resolved against further importations and against resident colonies of nutria in the Midwest.

About 125 policy-makers from 12 met at the Minnesota state park on July 10-12.

They agreed that the fur-bearing nutria, a 15-20 pound marsh-dwelling rodent from South America, is detrimental to waterfowl and muskrats and should be banned from midwestern marshes.

The Commissioners resolved as a group to use local authority to prohibit importation and release of nutria, to remove present colonies if possible and to use utmost caution to prevent the escape of penreared nutria.

Part of the complaint against the nutria is that it takes up large areas of marsh, then produces pelts worth little more than muskrat. Muskrats require less marsh living room than nutria.

In some southern marshes, nutria have taken over from muskrats and eaten out marsh foods formerly used by waterfowl.

Rayon, Acetate Care Different

"Iron rayons and acetates immediately after washing, if possible," advises Lola Belle Green, extension specialist in clothing at Michigan State University.

Laws requiring that the label must state whether the fabric is rayon, acetate or a blend of these, made it much easier to know how to care for these garments.

The two are washed similarly. Both should be washed before they get too dirty; the colored garments should be separate from the white ones (in both washing and drying); they should not be allowed to soak because rayon fibers weaken when wet; and they should be rinsed in water which is the same temperature as the wash water.

Bleaching is not necessary; rayon is a naturally white fiber. To dry, roll the garment in a turkish towel and knead out the moisture. However, do not leave the garment in the towel because colored, especially printed, fabrics tend to streak.

If the fabric is all acetate, only a warm iron is needed, a high temperature will melt and fuse the material. The garment should be evenly damp and ironed on the wrong side with very little pressure. Iron the material smooth, but don't try to dry it. After ironing, hang on a hanger in an open space; the fabric will smooth out the wrinkles as it dries.

All rayon materials can be treated the same way except that the temperature of the iron should be somewhat higher than that used on acetate.

If the material is a blend of the two, follow the ironing directions for acetate, Miss Green advises.

Many people could retire comfortably on what their experience has cost them.

State Wildlife Changes Many, U.M. Expert Says

Nothing stays the same in this world, and that goes for Michigan's wildlife too.

So says William H. Burt, curator of Mammals at The University of Michigan.

"Several mammals—large and conspicuous one, at that—have disappeared entirely, or in part, from the state," he says. "The wolverine, marten, fisher, cougar, caribou and bison are probably gone. The elk has been introduced and reestablished in the state, but the original herd is no longer here."

According to the University professor, "The timber wolf, lynx, and moose are now restricted to Isle Royale or to the wilder parts of the Upper Peninsula. All these formerly could be found throughout the state."

What happened? "Members of this group of animals, valued for fur or meat, have been victims not only of changed habitats, but of the trap and gun," he says.

The black bear, river otter, beaver, white-tailed deer, and bobcat haven't fared so well either. "Still abundant in the northern parts of the state, they have disappeared from southern farming districts. Some were just shot wiped out at one time but wise conservation methods have brought them nearly to their former numbers," Professor Burt explains.

"The porcupine and snow-shoe hare in the southern part of the state have had to make room for the man with the plough but the gun, of course, also played a part," he adds.

Other animals profited by the clearing of the land. Some species followed the clearings northward and so increased their respective ranges.

"At least four species, the prairie mole, striped ground squirrel, prairie deer mouse, and cottontail are known northward and now are clearings northward and now are to be found over most of the Lower Peninsula," says Professor Burt.

Other mammals have been able to keep to their original ranges but with some ups and downs. "The opossum undoubtedly has increased in abundance. It was considered rare in the state until about 1900. Now it is one of the commonest of the larger mammals in the southern four tiers of counties.

"The gray squirrel and woodchuck, although still present in all parts of the state, have been reduced in numbers over much of the area—the gray squirrel because of the restricted woodland habitat and the woodchuck because of the constant vigilance of the farmer with his 22-caliber rifle." Professor Burt says.

Clarenceville Methodists To Hear Evangelists

The Reverend and Mrs. Owen Murphy and daughter, Glennys Ruth of London, England, will be in charge of the "Big Open Air Service" to be held Sunday evening, July 28 at the Clarenceville Methodist Church.

The service is scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. The Reverend Murphy family have held meetings in most of the United States and have traveled extensively in England.

Rev. Murphy will be the guest speaker at the service and Mrs. Murphy and daughter will present special music.

PAINT

To simplify mixing paint to match work already done, smear a little of the mixed paint on a piece of window glass. Then hold the glass against the surface to be matched and compare the colors. If the swatch doesn't match, wipe it from the glass before applying another sample.
