Grads from High School Clue In Former Classmates

The whole aim of high school nowadays is to prepare a student for college life. Mrs. Kathryn Kinney, counselor, at North Farmington High School, decided last month.

With this in mind she thought that an excellent idea would be to contact the students who had graduated from the high school and were at colleges and universities and have them tell in their own words what things they had found most useful to them, what things had overwhelmed them, and what studies were most necessary.

In other words a bulletin board that would form a guideline for today's students. When the letters were sent out the response was most gratifying. The letters were placed on a bulletin board in the hall where all the students would have access to them.

When asked about the general tone of the letters were Mrs. Kinney said, "The former students in their letters emphasized largely the same things that we tell the students about college. But many times these same things are more meaningful when they come from someone nearer their own age. The students all read these letters with great interest."

This bulletin board will become a permanent fixture in the High School and not only future college students will be contacted but also students who have gone into the service.

Farmington Ladies Visit Inner City

A trip of interest to suburban women was taken last week when a group from the Women's Association of Farmington's Church of Our Savior took a bus trip into the inner city to see the depressed areas and what conditions there are like first hand.
