Parents Should Caution Childred to Beware

Because child molestation incidents increase heavily in spring and summer, parents should caution their youngsters now against going for walks or rides with any stranger, said State Police Sgt. Adolph Ploehn, commander of the Detroit post.

Where adult supervision over children in outside activity is not possible, parents should insist that their youngsters be in company with others. Sergeant Ploehn emphasized. A child alone on a playground, exploring a vacant building or loitering in an alley can too easily become the prey of a molester.

Any incidents involving molestation of children should be promptly reported by parents to police. Sergeant Ploehn said this will expedite investigation which can help thwart possible other attempts by an offender. He stressed that names of minors molested and their parents are not made public except where warranted in cases of abduction or murder.

SERGEANT PLOEHN listed these guides for parents in cautioning youngsters about molestation dangers:

Children should not go for walks or rides with any person without parental approval.

Because public rest rooms, in numbers, children should have companions going to and from school, at playgrounds, going to or from movies, when running errands, etc.

Because public rest rooms, isolated places or vacant buildings can be high danger areas; children should be in strapped not to loiter there. Youngsters should be advised to remember unusual features about a suspected molester and about any car which may be involved.
