Gifted Children Not "Sissies," Says Professor

The general thinking that gifted children pay for their intellectual superiority with physical awkwardness, poor health, and emotional instability is not so says Warren A. Ketchum, associate professor of education at The University of Michigan.

"Giftedness is something which, in a large majority of cases, touches the whole individual. As such, gifted children are not only smarter than other children. They are also larger, stronger, healthier, better adjusted, and more the same age. Furthermore, as they grow older, gifted children show an increase in their superiority over other children," Professor Ketchum states.

"Several important personal characteristics of gifted children are able to confuse and mislead their parents and teachers. The gifted child's curiosity, persistence, purposefulness, and sensitivity frequently irritate and make the appearance of disobedience, inattention, and instability. "Parents, teachers, and others, on occasion, underestimate the ability of these children. They are being too active or interested in the wrong things."

According to Professor Ketchum, "A good individual intelligence test administered by a trained psychologist or psychometrist is the most reliable method of determining a gifted child. Group intelligence tests can be used to advantage in screening children for above average intelligence."

He points out, however, that above average intellectual ability is not sufficient to classify children as gifted. "A frequent source of error in identifying the gifted is to think only in terms of the brightest child or best achiever in a given class. The best learners are frequently above average in intellectual ability but they may not be gifted in the strict sense of the term."

"There is general agreement that a gifted child must achieve an IQ of 130 or a mental age of 1.3 times his chronological age on a good individual intelligence test. A large majority of children who do so are found to have the requisite physical, personal, and social characteristics and talents and aptitudes which characterize the gifted."

He points out that children inherit the characteristics which make them gifted. "On the other hand, some gifted children are born to parents who are not themselves gifted but pass on to their children, family characteristics which determine giftedness," he concludes.

It's apple season in the Midwest and many of the finest varieties are now on the market. Look for Jonathan, McIntosh, Delicious and Golden Delicious for "eating apples," and Greening and Wealthy for cooking.

Planned Kitchen Saves Work Time

Rearranging the kitchen storage areas can save time and effort, says Norma Landon, Michigan State University home economist.

A little planning can make the kitchen a more convenient place to work. Look over each piece of equipment, think of where it will first and store it there to save steps.

Make work centers by storing things together that are used together. In the mixing center one will want flour, sugar, and other ingredients along with measuring equipment, mixing bowls and spoons. This is the place for spices and commercial mixes, too.

Most kitchens have equipment which is seldom or never used such as holiday cookie cutters. Often these items are taking space in some of the most convenient areas. Many can be put on high shelves or in out-of-the-way drawers—make more space for things used often.

Duplicates of some small equipment is desirable. Measuring spoons and cups are often used in several areas of the kitchen. Steps by having a set in the mixing center and another by the stove or sink.

To save lifting heavy equipment, store it where it's easy to reach and is up from the floor.

Rearrange bowls and dishes. Stack only like items together, such as soup bowls, cereal plates or saucers each in a separate stack. Stacking various sizes of mixing bowls together one must lift the whole pile to get the bottom one which makes more work.

Half shelves can be added to the cupboard to give more space and eliminate mixed stacks of dishes. Housewives may find they use more bowls than they use if they can, some should be put away on the higher shelves in the cupboard and the rest spread out.

Plan Next Year's Flower Beds Now

Plan for next years flowers now says Fred Widmoyer, horticulture specialist.

First, decide where you want the flower beds. This is the place for roses and crocus and then visit the seed store or look through the bulb catalogs and pick out the kinds and colors you want.

Tulips don't look as well single file as they do in blocks where they provide solid, bright color. Says Widmoyer, extension horticulture specialist at Michigan State University. For sheltered locations, he advises using single early tulips and species, ideal for spots along low walls.

Hyacinths also look best planted in differently colored clumps of six or eight. Vivid blue hyacinths are the most popular varieties, but also come in pink and white. They are often used as edging for walks and paths.

Daffodils can be used in beds and borders, blended into rock gardens, used to set off a wall, tree or shrub or can be "naturalized" in a lawn or woodland setting where the lawn is never cut. The nice thing about the versatile daffodil is its reproducing ability. It can be left in the ground to multiply year after year. A dozen or so will become 50 or 100 in a short time, Widmoyer commented.

Crocus should be planted in groups of at least a dozen plants all of the same color, Widmoyer says. They look well scattered regularly under shrubs too. The bulbs should be planted two inches deep and at least three inches apart. They grow only about three inches high so long, stemmed plants such as tulips are too tall to be planted with crocus.

Tulips, hyacinths and daffodils should all be planted six inches deep and at least six inches apart, or at least three times the height of the bulb in depth and distance. If you want blossoms in the spring, plant now!

Most sandwiches can be stored two or three weeks in the freezer. It takes them from three to four hours to thaw. Pack them in the lunch box in the morning and they'll be completely thawed by the noon hour. They have their best flavor just after thawing, too.
