Applicants Long On Waiting List Get Heating Permits First

Gas furnaces or gas conversion units are going to be needed by many residents here soon, and the gas heating firms in this area are geared to meet the demand.

However, if you are one of the homeowners who hasn't had his application in quite awhile with Consumers Power Co., do not start to make any plans without a little checking first. Chances are it's a little late.

APPLICANTS for gas space heating permits, who requested these in the last year or so, should be getting notices now.

Here's Reason Consumers Can Grant Permits

Consumers Power Company recently told the Michigan Public Service Commission it could grant the 30,000 additional space heating installations without incurring the cost of its present customers.

The installations are being located among the homes of the operating divisions "on an equitable basis, subject to readiness of applicants to install space heating equipment promptly."

On the waiting list before permission was granted were more than 170,000 applicants.

Thus, not all applicants are likely to get permits, and those who should not delay in getting the installation contracted.

CONSUMERS supplies natural gas service to 288 Michigan communities with a total population of 2,373,000. In addition to many of the state's larger cities, nearby communities are Pontiac, Berkley, Birmingham, Livonia, Wayne, and Plymouth.

Demand for gas space heating service in the Consumers area has outstripped supplies for some years.

THE COMPANY has been able, however, to increase its gas supply repeatedly in various ways, including the development of the Overisel and Northville gas fields in Michigan, and the establishment of three large storage fields in the northern part of the lower peninsula.

Its gas sales in the 12 months ended June 30, 1938 were more than four times as much as in 1927. Of the company's 465,000 gas customers, more than 48 percent now are receiving space heating service.

Consumers hopes that one of these days before too long it will be in position to take care of every applicant for space heating. Toward that end it recently entered into two contracts for additional supplies, but these are yet dependent upon completion of pipelines and approval of the Federal Power Commission.

USE OF BLEACH
If you have "drip dry" or "no iron" collars, be careful when using bleach. Many of these "easy care" fabrics are discolored by chlorine bleaches. If this is the case with your fabric—the label will say "avoid chlorine bleach"—use one of the quaternary bleaches or hydrogen peroxide, advising Berneta Kah, extension clothing specialist at Michigan State University. Some of the new "easy care" fabrics are not harmed by chlorine bleaches. The label is your guide.

QUALITY OF PEACHES DEPENDS ON RIFENESS
Marketing Information Agent, say quality of peaches depends on ripeness and soundness. Although most luscious when tree-ripened, easy bruising, and rapid breakdown and decay result from picking when slightly green. If peaches are picked too early, the result often is tough, rubbery, and shriveled fruit. No sugar is gained by the fruit after it has been taken off the tree.
