Carl Senob Will Speak on Music August 10 at Universalist Church

Music is "an expression of life man has found essential," believes Carl Senob, who will be August 10 session of the summer arts meetings at the Farmington Universalist Church.

Mr. Senob, teacher and composer, plans in his talk on "Music and What it Should Mean to All of Us" to explore the origins of music in various cultures, leading up to music of the recent past and present. There will be particular emphasis on beats because "music is so very dependent on rhythm, and rhythm, in life."

Mr. Senob, currently director of music at Western High School in Detroit, said he also would briefly into basic elements of form in classical and modern music, with about instrumental and choral music.

The speaker, a music education graduate of the University of Michigan, also has studied two summers at the American Conservatory of Music in Chicago. He taught for a time in Iowa at Detroit's Metropolitan High before going to Western five years ago.

Composer of several published choral works, Mr. Senob will celebrate on the occasion of Detroit's 250th anniversary to compose music for chorus and orchestra in the public schools' production commemorating the event. He also wrote the music for a production marking the 100th anniversary of the Michigan Education Association several years ago.

This summer arts session is open to the public. The discussion will begin at 10:30 a.m. at the Farmington Universalist Church located one block east of Farmington Road and one block north of Grand River street, in Farmington, Michigan.

Corky Hoer, Fred Johnson's name is omitted, it is thought unintentionally. The high lights of the carnival was to hit the "bulldozer" and see John Lake fall into a tub of water. Of course, all the kids thought he had it made because it was such a hot day. There were many raft races and games for all ages and not a child went home without some "loot" in his hand.
