Library Services Still Not Enough

According to the American Library Directory, there are over 14,000 libraries in the United States and Canada. In Michigan, there are over 300 public libraries and some 700 school libraries, representing a total of seven million volumes.

In spite of this, nearly one million persons have little or no library service in Michigan at the present time. Widespread shifts of urban dwellers to the countryside, newly annexed areas to cities and existing libraries unable to obtain adequate local financial support, are chief factors contributing to the problem.
