Don't have fear of monotony when you use one color. Textures and values can be varied. In a kitchen you might use a green spatter pattern on the floor, a lighter green on the walls and a still lighter green for the cabinets. An area of patterned wallpaper, printed fabric for draperies or a patterned floor may be what you'd like to add interest. Shop in Friendly Farmington! Bonnie Cosper, and Carole House.

If this is impossible, the appropriate agencies that can assist are notified.

98 Teachers, Administrators, PTA Member Have Membership in ACE

Ninety-eight of Farmington's elementary teachers, administrators and PTA members currently hold membership in the South Oakland County Branch of the Association for Child Development Education.

The S.O.C. branch boasts and all time high membership of 98 reported Mrs. Priscilla Symes, Eagle elementary school teacher, who is co-ordinator for Farmington.

At each of the dinner meetings held at Kimball high school, the South Oakland County Branch of the Association for Child Development Education is invited to discuss timely topics on education of children from 2 to 12.

The theme for this year's program is "Fundamentals for Today's Children."

The ACE headquarters is located in Washington, D.C. At the present time ACEI members across the nation are cooperatively earning and making financial contributions to a building fund project.

A new headquarters building is needed for expanded offices and publications. When the building is begun in March, it will be evidence what teachers, themselves, have faith in education for today's children. It will mean that teachers have a stake in research in childhood education, and the ACEI publications based on recent findings in child development.

THIS NEW experimental center will be known as the official meeting place for conferences and committees.

Each year the ACEI Study Conference is held in a different region of this country. The 1959 Study Conference will be held at St. Louis, Mo., March 29 - April 3.

Planned Areas of Color Help Give Feeling of Room Unity

Carefully planned areas of color can help give a feeling of unity to a room, points out Jane Graff, extension home furnishings specialist at Michigan State University. Unity in a room is the feeling that everything goes together—a room with real unity is not "busy" or cluttered looking.

Windows, doors, individual pieces of furniture and accessories break up solid spaces and make for a "busy" or confused look. You need to pull these things together. Using one color for most of the large areas in the room is the quickest and most effective way to gain this unity, continues Miss Graff. When planning a color scheme in a room, plan for large areas first. These include the floor, walls, large pieces of furniture and draperies.

Choose a color that the family likes and that goes well with colors in adjoining rooms. Use this color on 2/3 or more of the room area;—concentrate on large unbroken color areas. Look at the size and layout of the room: your eye will tell you what areas make up 2/3 or more. If you want a small room to look larger, you'll probably want more than 2/3 of the room the same color.

Don't have fear of monotony when you use one color. Textures and values can be varied. In a kitchen you might use a green spatter pattern on the floor, a lighter green on the walls and a still lighter green for the cabinets. An area of patterned wallpaper, printed fabric for draperies or a patterned floor may be what you'd like to add interest. Shop in Friendly Farmington! Bonnie Cosper, and Carole House.
