

Our Queen of Hearts Sees St. Patrick's Day in N.Y.

By Faith Gillespie
One of the ambitions of this old Irishman's life is to be in Ireland for a St. Patrick's Day Parade. Last year, however, I was in the next best place, New York City. And did they have a parade!

Miles of bleachers had been set up the night before, and by 10 a.m. great flocks of New York's Finest are assembled and sent to parade stations as the busiest street in the Western Hemisphere, maybe Fifth Avenue, is jammed with traffic. The people come, a few, a few dozens, a throng, and the parade begins at noon. There are drum and bugle corps, and file and drum corps, and high school bands from all over the country, and killie bands. There are ROTC bands and drill teams, and office auxiliaries, and National Guard units and horse platoons. There are Irish organizations of every conceivable sort. And after all these, there are more of the same.

The parade goes on and on, and on. It lasts all day long, till dark. I had a maline ticket in my pocket, so I reluctantly dragged myself away from the curbside just as a little girl's life and drum group went by. When the parade was over, I rushed out of the theatre and back to Fifth Avenue just in time to see a little girl's life and drum group go by. Didn't miss a thing.

The typical New Yorker is thought to be sophisticated and blasé, well-nigh impossible to impress, but let me say that no country child from the Western Plains could enjoy a parade more than these New Yorkers did. This country child from the Western Plains watched the parade with glee, and also watched the New Yorkers watch the parade. It is a procession of their friends and family, their neighbors and heroes, and they love it. They wave to their children as the school bands strut past. They call out to the ranks of an eye-ached parade squad, "Hey, Pete, you look good in your uniform!" They beam with civic pride as the mayor walks by, and they lustily cheer all the dignitaries and politicians. Kennedy was King for a Day, almost.

All of a sudden, everybody's Irish, regardless of race, color, or creed. Making is gaily united under the sign of the shamrock. Makes me wonder . . . if we can do it once a year, why can't we work toward unity of mankind for every day?

Can't get a whole lot done if we spend all our time in parades, though. Maybe a good place to go from there is:

IRISH STEW
Cut into 1/2-inch cubes 1 1/2 pounds of lamb, dredge in seasoned flour, and brown in 3 tablespoons of hot fat. (You could use neck bones, which are inexpensive, but use less fat, and pour off the excess.) Add to the fat and brown: 1/2 cup sliced onions, or more. Cover meat and onions with boiling water. Reduce heat and simmer, covered, for over an hour, till meat is nearly tender. Add a diced carrot or two, and a couple-three potatoes, cubed, and a bay leaf. Simmer another half hour or so, till vegetables are done. Add frozen lima beans or peas for the last few minutes, if you use them. Correct seasoning and thicken gravy if it needs it. Serve with Irish soda bread. And take a leprechaun to lunch.

Zsa Zsa Gabor 'Turns Table' On Admirer
It is almost legendary that Zsa Zsa Gabor's admirers gift her with some costly token of their esteem. Recently however, the tables were turned and it was Zsa Zsa who gifted the admirer. Michelle Flood, nine years old, and the daughter of Jean and Walter Flood is an ardent fan of the beautiful star. When Michelle heard that Zsa Zsa was going to be making an appearance at Northland, she wrote a note to her idol telling her of her admiration, and ended her letter with a typical enthusiastic, "P.S. I love you."

The day of the fashion show, Michelle and her mother were in the audience, of course. Lo and behold, over the loudspeaker came a voice asking if Michelle Flood was in the audience. The Public Relations Exec. came up to the Floods and asked Mrs. Flood if he could borrow Michelle for a few minutes. During that few minutes, Michelle had a personal interview with Zsa Zsa for about twenty minutes. Zsa Zsa was every bit as sweet and as glamorous as Michelle had pictured her to be. In her private dressing room, they chatted, with Zsa Zsa's entourage of three maids and a secretary scurrying around. Cherished forever will be the Effen Een Doll (Miss Chips) and flip-top hair-do that Zsa Zsa presented to Michelle. After the interview, Zsa Zsa's Secretary brought Michelle back to her mother and sat with Michelle throughout the fashion show.

Jean Flood (Michelle's mother) also made a fan like comment when she glimpsed Zsa Zsa on stage with a lovely white satin street-length dress with a double row of white mink at the hemline. Said Mother, "She is beautiful and very charming."

The World's Most Automatic Camera
That's what some people have called the KODAK INSTAMATIC 804 Camera. They may be right because this new camera does do just about everything automatically. To begin with, there's no threading of film. Just drop in a film cartridge and it's loaded. And the ASA film speed is set automatically. A few pulls wind the spring motor, so that your film advances automatically after each shot. In daylight, an electric eye sets your lens opening automatically. By flash, the automatic flash exposure sets the opening as you focus. A built-in computer checks your film speed against your lens opening and shutter speed. If your shutter speed is too fast for the light, the computer corrects your shutter speed before the shutter snaps. You'll built-in rangefinder, for exact focus. There's even a lighted signal in the viewfinder that tells you to "use flash" when available light is too dim. Pop on a flash-attachable flash ready. Take four flash pictures without changing bulbs, in five seconds, if you like. After each shot, film and flashcube advance automatically. LEDs on out, daylight or flash, this camera handles the picture taking chore for you, automatically. You should drop in and try the KODAK INSTAMATIC 804 Camera for yourself. There's a good chance you'll agree that the "804" is the "world's most automatic camera."
