The Distaff Point of View

Jerry Wendt
Woman's Editor

"The greatest killer of women is breast cancer," this startling statement was made by Dov Ben-Meir, Director General of the Israel Cancer Association. Dov Ben-Meir, is a stocky, humorous man who has had a colorful background in the history of Israel. The occasion was the luncheon for the members of the press, radio and television at the Press Club, Friday, March 25 to launch the Michigan Cancer Foundation 1988 educational crusade. Lung cancer runs second.

With breast cancer so easily detectable and curable, you would wonder why in the world these figures stay so high. Yet people still will make that fatal delay. I came away from the luncheon almost wholly convinced that death by cancer is largely a matter of choice by the victim. People just won't get those all important check-ups.

In Israel, they are ahead of us in this matter. They set up regional stations for checkups and do not depend on the women to come in voluntarily for checkups. They have instituted a system by which postcards are mailed to a certain number of women who are invited to come to the center on a specific date and time.

The regional stations are open three times a week and doctors are on hand to examine the women who have been invited to come on these days. There is no charge for these check ups.

If you see your neighbor coming up the walk, she may be coming to borrow a cup of sugar or she may be bringing you a message from the Michigan Cancer Foundation that could very easily save your life. Welcome her and test your knowledge about cancer and its symptoms. Over 20,000 Michigan Cancer Foundation volunteers will knock on half a million doors in the area of Wayne, Oakland, Macomb, and Monroe counties.

Seated at the speakers table was Leonard Simons, successful business man whose constant assistance to worthwhile civic enterprises could serve as an example for many men.

Wayne Walker was also a speaker. This popular Lions player disproved the old adage about brains and brawn not mixing with his speech. He is an excellent speaker. One remark he made relieved the somberness of the occasion when he said that if the Lions didn't do better next year, they would have their pictures removed from the bubble gum wrappers!

Always lucky in our luncheon partners we were seated next to WWT's Pat Elliott, a most interesting person, and Mr. Turko, a Livonia man who is a former member of the Michigan Cancer Foundation. Turko introduced us to Dove Ben-Meir, and we asked him the meaning of the symbols on the Cancer pin. He explained to us that the sword is symbolic of the knowledge we have that is thrusting through the fog of darkness of ignorance. The crab is the name in Israel for cancer. The different metals represent the years of service for the volunteers.

Ladies, watch for these pins. Welcome the wearer and the knowledge that she brings. I have great faith in women and their power to overcome obstacles. Cancer is a great enemy and everytime we acquire a little more knowledge we make a chink in the armour of this deadly foe!

Our Queen Of Hearts Prepares A 'Queen Of The Kitchen' Recipe

By Faith Gillespie

"Where do you get all those recipes?" people keep asking. I tell them that I have been on a recipe hunt for as long as I can remember.

For years I have been clipping from all the newspapers and magazines. I can get my hands on. Periodically the clippings begin spilling out of the boxes and drawers and envelopes that I stuff them into, and then I file them. The four-drawer file cabinet, battered, bulging, is the only thing that keeps us from being buried with recipes.

Then there are cook books. I love 'em. They make wonderful reading even when you aren't cooking.

I enjoy the slick, photo-filled volumes that the household magazines publish out of their sterile test kitchens, and I dole upon the old, ragged ones that I find at rummage sales, the kind with fifty-year-old gravy spots in them.

I can resist buying specialty cook books, those devoted to cheeses, or Hungarian cooking, or brunches. And some of my very favorites are the regional cook books, the paper-covered, stapled kind that church ladies assemble. I send for booklets, too, all the free ones from advertisers and from the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Best of all are cook books written by people who really love to cook. They have charm and style and really delicious recipes, lovingly collected or created by the authors. I really feel that Mrs. Rombauer (Joy of Cooking) and James Beard (Fireside Cook Book, etc.) and Gladys Taber (Stillmeadow Cook Book) are my friends . . . or would be, should we meet. There are lots of people, however, who will never write a cook book, who are loving cooks. When I eat their food, I always go home with a recipe or two in my pocket.

The treasured recipes in my collection are written on file cards or the backs of envelopes or scraps of wrapping paper. They have come from all over the world . . . my Grandma Kruger's Ukrainian cabbage rolls, stroganoff from the chef at Cafe Martin in Montreal, the fudge that my mother made on the South Dakota shore ranch, my neighbor's chocolate pound cake . . . recipes garnered wherever I have met a real cook.

Last week I met another, one of the finalists at the Edison Company's Queen of the Kitchen cook-off for Women Who Work Week. It was diminutive Marianna Fortuna, whose Corned Beef Casserole won third prize.

We had it for supper, because I almost never print a recipe that we haven't tried. We found it to be delicious, a good family dish that is not expensive to make or time-consuming in preparation.

Corned Beef Casserole: Sauté till tender in 2 tablespoons of butter; ¼ cup chopped green pepper and ½ cup chopped onion. Stir in 1 can tomato soup and 1 cup grated sharp cheddar cheese, stirring constantly over low heat till cheese melts. Add 1 tablespoon prepared mustard, 1 teaspoon dehydrated parsley flakes, 2 tablespoons sliced black olives, and 3 cups canned whole kernel corn (drained). Place in greased medium-sized casserole. Sprinkle ½ cup Chinese noodles on top to form a border. Bake 20 to 30 minutes at 350 degrees. Serves 6.

I feel that in Miss Fortuna, I have found another friend.
