Teacher Sent To Institute For Marketing

John R. Fattel, Garden City teacher on the staff of the Dearborn Public Schools and Schoolcraft College, will attend an institute for post-high school teachers of distribution and marketing at Michigan State University through July 22.

Fattel, married and the father of three sons, lives at 31777 Bridge.

He teaches distributive education in the Dearborn school system and in the evening teaches salesmanship at Schoolcraft College.

The institute will have 35 teachers from across the country attending the event, sponsored by M.S.U. under a contract with the U.S. Office of Education's Division of Adult and Vocational Research.

The month-long institute will concentrate on the following four areas: advanced study of the concepts of marketing and distribution; study of specialized techniques in marketing and distribution; understanding the curriculum patterns for the mid-management distributive education program; and application of marketing concepts through visitations, observations, and case studies.

In addition to classroom sessions and seminars, the persons at the institute will take a field trip to Chicago and the Kenosha, Wis., Technical Institute.
