Ancient Orthodox Rites Unite Pair

In a special ancient Orthodox ceremony in St. Clement's Basilica Orthodox Church recently, Patricia Ann Ewing became the bride of Anthony Fenech.

The ceremony was unusual because the established ritual for marriage was combined with the divine liturgy. This was the established norm within the early Christian church but had gone under transition becoming a separate ceremony over the years.

In the service, the bride and groom were married and received holy communion representing unity with God and themselves through the church.

A number of clerical dignitaries were present and congratulated at the service. They were the Rt. Rev. Mitred Stephen Burdick of Laramie, Ohio, archdiocesan missionary and pastor of the Order of St. Vladimir, the Rt. Rev. Phobus Donahue, of East Lansing, dean of the Central States Diocese; the Rev. George Ceror, pastor of St. Clement's Bulgarian Orthodox Church; the Rev. Igor Burdick, pastor of the American Orthodox Church of Saint Innocent—the parish of the married couple.

The couple's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Patrick R. Ewing, and Mr. and Mrs. Carmel A. Fenech, both of Dearborn Heights.

The bride wore an empire gown of white silk brocade imported from Lebanon. The gown was enriched with crystals and pearls and had a matching headpiece. The bouquet was white orchids and ivy.

The bridesmaids wore turquoise peau-de-sea gowns with matching headpieces and floor-length veils. They carried carnations and ivy.

Joan Reilly was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Sylvia Bazil, Susan Kovach, Marlene Falson, Patricia Smith, Sylvia Elintsky, Darlene Pearl, Ida Marie Mason, and Joan Fenech. Pam O'Neill and Marlene Fenech were junior bridesmaids and Bonnie Brammer was the flower girl. Patrick C. Ewing, the bride's brother, was best man. Ushers
