

How States Battle Great Lakes Pollution

Michigan and other states bordering the Great Lakes are beginning to act to curb pollution of the inland seas.

The states, along with the Canadian province of Ontario, are working to disprove predictions that the Great Lakes will one day become too contaminated for use by humans.

Nevertheless, some cities, industries and even the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers have continued to dump inadequately treated wastes into the lakes.

THE SAD STATE of Lake Erie was pointed up in Michigan in 1962 when a state park beach near Monroe was posted as unsafe for swimming.

The Michigan Water Resources Commission reported recently that some offenders would not make corrections until pushed. Others—notably Dow Chemical Co. of Midland and Consumers Power Co.—were given credit for starting their own corrective programs early.

Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin officials will take part Jan. 31 in a regional conference in Chicago on Lake and 12 plants in Indiana asking that they be enjoined from polluting Lake Michigan.

•Indiana and Illinois officials set Dec. 31, 1968, as the deadline for completion of industrial and municipal waste treatment facilities where needed near the south end of Lake Michigan.

•The Minnesota Legislature created a Pollution Control Agency with increased power, staff and funds.

•In New York, comprehensive sewage treatment studies are under way in 17 counties along the Great Lakes to develop immediate and long-range plans for treatment facilities. In addition, there are 104 construction grant projects in various stages of planning or development.

•Industrial waste treatment facilities in New York are being reviewed at 36 plants. In an attempt to combat oil pollution, the State Health Department is working with the Corps of Engineers and major oil companies to keep spillage of oil at a minimum.

•In Pennsylvania, Erie and the Hammermill Paper Co. are collaborating on a joint project to determine if their excess wastes can be treated jointly.

•The Ohio Water Pollution Control Board has set 1970 as the target date for all municipalities in the Lake Erie basin to install sewage plants for at least secondary treatment and for industry to step up its own controls.

•Ohio's Natural Resources Department is moving on another front to build reservoirs for control of water flow in streams emptying into Lake Erie. The program includes stream monitoring stations for constant pollution surveillance.

•In Wisconsin, Milwaukee officials are studying the possibility of constructing storage tanks to hold storm and sewage overflow until the polluted water can be treated after high runoff periods.

•In two years since a get-together antipollution law was enacted in Ontario, 14 industries have been convicted or pleaded guilty for violations.

Fix-It Tip

It is generally not necessary to thin paint any more, but when it is needed, be sure to carefully follow thinning directions on the label. Use a large mixing pot and thin down only the amount of material which is to be used at once. Most paints have the required amount of thinner in the paint formula, according to the National Paint, Varnish and Lacquer Association, so you should never try to over-thin or "stretch" your paint.
