Demand For Stamps Swamps Post Offices On top of this, the increase came soon after the Christmas rush which had already deplied the stamp stock. Right after he had sent the regular order to washington for stamps, Jenkins added, post of stamps, Jenkins added, post of stamped and had to record the stamp stamped.

Maurice F. Dever, Superintendent of mails in Farmington, remarked that post office headquarters in Washington didn't anticipate the flood of people who were buying stamps like there weren't going to be anymore.

Dever added that a lot of businesses had stocks of five cent stamps on hand when the ratise went into effect and grabbed up as many penny stamps as they could.

The same sort of situation prevailed in the other three post offices.

Art Jenkins, postmaster in Livonia, commented that the postal rate hike bill was signed by President Johnson around Dec. 15 or 16 which only gave the printers in Washington a little more than two weeks to get new stamps out.
